

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

LIVERPOOL, LANCASTHIRE, a borough, parish, seaport, and market town, situated in the hund. of West Derby, on the eastern side of the estuary of the Mersey: 201 miles from London (coach road 205), 36 from Manchester. — Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe to Liverpool: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 69 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m. and 6 p.m.: post closes 5 a.m. and 6½ p.m. — Liverpool derives its name, according to some authorities, from the Welsh words Lle'r pell, 'place on the pool,' on account of its having formerly been situated on the borders of a pool, which occupied the site of the present Custom-house. Others, however, derive the first syllable from a kind of water-fowl, anciently known as the liver or lever; but the real derivation is very uncertain, and the origin of the town cannot be authentically ascertained. Baxter erroneously supposes it to have been the harbour of the Tentanii, spoken of by Ptolemy; but there is nothing to be found in corroboration of this assertion, and no Roman remains of any kind have ever been discovered here. It is not even mentioned in the Domesday survey, although that book contains a grant of all the ports of Lancashire, between the Ribble and the Mersey, to Roger of Poitiers, who, we are told by Camden, built a castle here. To the erection of this castle, the origin of the town may most probably be ascribed. The castle subsequently passed into various hands; and in 1715, its remains having been pulled down, St. George's church was erected on its site. The conquest of Ireland, in 1172, first raised Liverpool to some importance, in consequence of its being a convenient spot for embarking for that country: a circumstance which indicates the root of its present importance. Henry II., and his successors, granted it several charters, and in 1227 it was constituted a free borough. In 1338, Liverpool furnished King Edward III. with a small vessel, manned with six mariners, for his expedition against France. The plague ravaged the town in the years 1361 and 1548. A proclamation was made here in 1566 for the first lottery spoken of in the annals of this country. In 1630 Liverpool was rated at £25 for ship-money by Charles I. During the civil war, Prince Rupert besieged it, and took it by storm on the 26th June, 1644, after it had held out for twenty-four days, when all the inhabitants were put to the sword till the besiegers reached the High Cross, at the front of the present town-hall, the survivors being made prisoners. In the following year, however, the town again fell into the hands of the parliament. In 1690, King William III. embarked here with his army on his way to Ireland. From that period Liverpool has gradually increased in opulence and in commerce, and now carries on an immense traffic with all quarters of the globe. Its trade with America, with the north of Europe, and with the East Indies, is every day increasing, and it is now one of the most prosperous and flourishing seaports in the kingdom. The town has been much enlarged of late years, and contains a great number of noble and convenient public buildings, and several religious edifices. Liverpool was originally, quoad spiritualia, a chapelry to Walton. At the dissolution there were four chantries in this chapel: the king's rent was £10. 1s. 4d. It was not till the 10th year of William III. that an act was passed, declaring, that from 24th June, 1699, the town and liberties of Liverpool should constitute a distinct parish, separate from Walton; the living to be a rectory, in two mediets, in the archd^y and diocese of Chester, and the patronage to be vested in the mayor and corporation. The old parochial chapel was now called the church of St. Nicholas, and a new church, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected. St. Peter's church was founded in 1699, and consecrated in 1704. It is a plain but well built structure, with a tower 108 feet high, and a peal of ten well toned bells. It contains some curious carvings in oak. The gross income of this mediety, in 1835, was £615. St. Nicholas' church was erected in 1774, on the base of the ancient structure. It is a neat Gothic edifice.

The tower and spire were erected in 1810, the old one having fallen on 11th February, same year, during the ringing of the bells. Twenty-eight persons were killed; but it was fortunate the accident took place then, for had it been but a few minutes later, many more lives must have been lost. Almost the whole pews in the centre of the church were either entirely demolished or much injured, and the west gallery and organ were completely destroyed. A new and extremely light and elegant ornamental Gothic tower, about 40 yards in height, surmounted by an open lantern 20 yards in height, was afterwards erected. A peal of twelve bells has also been added. The gross income of this mediety, in 1835, was also £615. Amongst the churches and chapels in Liverpool, besides those of St. Peter and St. Nicholas, there are many elegant and highly-finished edifices, some of which are held to be superior both in style and size to most other fabrics of a similar rank in England. The style and order of architecture is very various, from the noblest Corinthian, Doric, and Gothic, down to the plain and humble barn-yard style of the Quakers' meeting-house. St. Peter's, St. John's, St. George's, and St. Thomas's, are handsome and well-built churches. St. Paul's is a miniature imitation of the great Cathedral of London. There are a great number of other churches, all of them elegant and commodious, and some of them, especially St. Luke's, St. Michael's, and the church of the Blind School, displaying considerable taste in their designs. Of the perpetual curacies in the parish, the following were in the patronage of the corporation, previous to 1835;—St. George's, gross income £130; St. Thomas's, gross income £138; St. Paul's, gross income £195; St. Anne's, gross income £99; St. John's, gross income £270; St. Michael's, gross income £290; St. Luke's, gross income £508; St. Martin's, gross income £530; Trinity, gross income £250. The others are:—St. Andrew; gross income £295. Patron, in 1835, J. Gladstone, Esq.—St. Bridget's; gross income, £305. Patrons, in 1835, trustees.—St. Catherine; gross income £250. Patrons, in 1835, trustees.—Christ church; gross income £105. Patron, in 1835, J. Houghton, Esq.—St. David's; gross income £120. Patrons, in 1835, trustees.—St. Mark's; gross income £370; Patrons, in 1835, trustees.—St. Matthew's; gross income £107. Patrons, the rectors of Liverpool.—St. Philip's; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, J. Cragg, Esq.—St. Stephen's; gross income £120. Patrons, the rectors of Liverpool. There are two floating chapels for seamen; 9 Independent and 9 Baptist places of worship; 4 Welsh Calvinist; 1 Society of Friends; 12 Methodist,—including 1 Primitive, 2 New Connexion, 7 Wesleyan, 1 Independent, and 1 Associate;—1 Sandemanian; 1 Swedenborgian; 1 Universalist; and 2 Unitarian chapels. There are also 2 Scottish kirks, 2 Secession, and 5 Roman Catholic chapels; a Jews' synagogue, and a Hebrew church. The Roman Catholic population of Liverpool is now rated at 80,000, and is yearly on the increase. Six-elevenths of the whole population are said to be Roman Catholics and dissenters. In so affluent a place as Liverpool, the religious and educational societies and institutions are, as might be expected, numerous and important, having every possible object in view that can promote moral and intellectual advancement. The elegant Town-hall, commenced in 1749, stands in an elevated and convenient situation; it is in the Corinthian style of architecture, and contains a spacious saloon with some splendid portraits of different members of the Royal Family; a most magnificent ball-room, 89 feet long, by 41 feet 6 inches wide, and 40 feet high, sumptuously fitted up; a smaller ball-room, two drawing rooms, and a banquetting-room. The ground story contains a council-room, committee-rooms, rooms for the mayor, and other offices, &c., and the basement contains a spacious kitchen, with appropriate offices. The building is surmounted by an elegant dome, which presents a most imposing appearance when viewed from the inside, the entire height being 106 feet. On the first staircase there is a colossal statue of the illustrious Canning, from the hand of the celebrated Chantrey. The New Exchange buildings, commenced in 1803, and erected from designs by John Foster, Esq., consist of four inside façades, three of which adjoin each other, the northern elevation of the Town-hall completing the quadrangle. The area enclosed by the two fronts is 197 feet from north to south, and 178 feet from east to west. The inside fronts have each a grand piazza, 15 feet in width. In the east wing there is a news and coffee room, 94 feet by 52, and above it a spacious apartment for the underwriters. The front and west and part of the east wings contain several commodious counting-houses, and there are extensive warehouses at the back of the building. The new assize-court and sessions-house is a commodious and spacious building, containing apartments fitted up in a manner well adapted to the purposes for which they were erected; the principal room, which is used for the judicium or civil causes, is 61 feet 6 inches long, by 23 feet wide. The magnificent new custom-house was erected on the site of the old dock, in 1828, from designs by Mr. Foster, the corporation's architect. The east and west fronts, and also the centre, have splendid porticoes ornamented with the royal arms. The entire basement is appropriated for the reception of bonded and other goods, the west wing is used for the fiscal offices, and in the centre are the approaches, and the "Long-Room," which is 146 feet in length, by 70 feet in width, and 45 feet in height; the segment ceiling is supported by 16 columns, and the whole is surmounted by a beautiful dome about 50 feet high. The building is of freestone, and is 466 feet 8 inches in length, measuring from east to west; the length of the wings is 224 feet 7 inches, and their width is 94 feet 4 inches; the length of the centre is 252 feet 6 inches, and its width through the portico is 95 feet. The entire building presents an appearance of the greatest simplicity and grandeur. The building erected for the purposes of the Liverpool Royal Institution in Colquitt Street, opened in 1817, and incorporated by Royal Charter in 1822, is a large and uniform structure, with a neat stone portico, containing a public or reading room, a lecture-room, committee-rooms, a museum, with interesting specimens of natural history and mineralogy, some paintings and statuary, &c. The institution was formed in the year 1814 for the promotion of literature, science, and the arts, and the corporation contribute £100 annually, £50 of which is awarded for the best oil painting. Liverpool also contains a Mechanics' Institution, founded in 1835; the structure was erected at an expense of £11,000, and afterwards partly rebuilt at an expense of £3,000. It is in the Ionic style, and contains an excellent theatre for lectures, capable of accommodating 1,500 auditors, a sculpture gallery, in which there are several fine statues, a museum, a reading-room, and a library of several thousand volumes. The Athenæum, opened in 1799, was the first of the kind instituted in this country. The structure is a neat building, erected at an expense of £4,000, in Church Street. It has a library of more than 14,000 volumes, among which are some very rare and curious works. The Lyceum, in Bold Street, named after an edifice in Athens in which Aristotle taught his dogmas of philosophy, was erected in 1802, at an expense of £11,000, which was derived from public subscriptions. The coffee-room is very spacious and commodious, and furnished, like that of the Athenæum, with a large collection of London and provincial newspapers, magazines, reviews, maps, and every other species of literary work; the library contains upwards of 30,000 volumes. Several newspapers are published in Liverpool weekly, one twice a week, and one three times a week. There are some splendid new baths on the west side of St. George's Dock, extending 239 feet in front of the river, and 87 feet in breadth backwards: they are built of stone and are fitted up with every requisite accommodation. The Theatre is an ornamental and commodious brick structure, with a stone front; the stage is spacious. It was opened in 1772; and it was at this theatre that Mr. John Palmer died on the 2d August, 1798, whilst performing the play of the "Stranger," and immediately after uttering the sentence, "There is another and a better world." The Royal Amphitheatre is a large, elegant building, chiefly appropriated to the performance of equestrian exercises, pantomimic exhibitions, &c. The Liver Theatre is tastefully fitted up. The Wellington Rooms contain spacious ball, card, and supper rooms; the front is of stone, and in the Corinthian style. In the Museum there is an interesting collection of natural objects, and of pieces of ancient armour. The Zoological Gardens are tastefully laid out, and conducted on the same principle as those of the Regent's Park, London, Botanic Gardens. The Mount, or St. James's Walk, affords an agreeable promenade, commanding an extensive prospect. The charitable institutions in Liverpool are numerous and well supported. The Infirmary, situated in Brownlow Street, and one of the most considerable edifices in the town, is a spacious and elegant three storied edifice, consisting of a centre and two wings, having a portico of the Ionic order, with massive pillars; it was opened in 1824, having been erected at an expense of £27,800, which was collected by public subscription. There are 20 wards, 5 of which, containing 104 beds, are appropriated to surgical cases; 4, containing 47 beds, to medical cases for males, and the remainder are divided for females into 3 surgical wards, containing 58 beds, and 2 medical containing 25 beds. The medical attendance is gratuitous, and the annual expenditure exceeds £5,000. The Northern Hospital in Leeds Street, for the accommodation of 60 in-patients, is an infirmary on a small scale, in aid of the principal one, and for behoof of the poor in the northern district of the town. The Lunatic Asylum, on the north side of Brownlow Hill, was erected in 1830. It is a neat and appropriate structure, rusticated beneath, and faced with stone-ashler above. The centre of the buildings retreats from the sides, thus forming them into wings. The expense of erection amounted to £11,000. Accommodation is afforded for 60 patients. There are extensive airing-grounds attached, which are enclosed by high walls. The old Lunatic asylum, near St. John's church, was latterly occupied as barracks. Amongst other remedial institutions are the south and north dispensaries, the Lock-hospital, the Ophthalmic infirmary, the Apothecaries' hall, the House of Recovery for fever and other contagious diseases, the Humane Society's institution for the restoration of the drowned, and the ladies' charity for medical and other aid to poor married females in childbed, in which £1,000 per annum have been expended. The Liverpool Merchant Seamen's Hospital is a charity intended for the support of decayed seamen of this port, and of their widows and children. It is supported partly by the monthly contribution of sixpence, which every seaman, sailing from the port, is obliged by act of parliament to pay out of his wages. It has likewise a capital stock of about £37,000 unclaimed prize-money. About 700 persons receive aid from this excellent institution. A building was erected in 1752 on ground belonging to the infirmary, at the expense of £1,500. The Lancaster County Refuge was opened in 1823. It is well-supported by voluntary subscription for the reformation of females liberated from the county-jail. The Female Penitentiary, in Falkner Street, is a benevolent and well-supported institution for reclaiming prostitutes. The House of Industry was erected at an expense of £8,000, and can accommodate 400 persons, who are employed in various works according to their ability. The almshouses are situated near the house of industry. The committee for the relief of debtors confined in the borough jail, was instituted in 1810, and is able to carry its object into effect by liberal subscriptions. The Female School of Industry was begun in 1809. One hundred young females are educated here. Their expenses are paid out of their earnings, a part of which also goes into a general fund, from which small annuities are paid to each on attaining the age of 55. The District Provident Society was instituted in 1830. Large sums are collected by the weekly visitors of this society, for charitable purposes,—such as payment of rent and supply of winter stores, clothing, and fuel, to the poor. In 1831, a sum of £1,460 was thus collected; and in 1833 the amount was £7,620: during these three years £11,512 were expended on the objects of this society. The Marine Society was instituted for the relief of reduced or aged masters of vessels, their widows and children. There are various others,—as the Marine Humane Society, and the Welsh and Liverpool Charitable Societies. The Strangers' Friend Society was founded, and is chiefly supported, by

Methodists, but its benefits are extended equally to strangers of all denominations, to the average number of 10,000 or 12,000 per annum. The hospital or school for the indigent blind was established in 1791: it is situated in London road, corner of Duncan Street. The principal occupations of the pupils are spinning; hamper and basket-making; plaiting of sash line; weaving of floor-cloth and sacking; the manufacture of worsted, hearth-rugs, and of foot-bears, points and gaskets, from old ropes; and the learning of music. In this last department the attention of the committee is principally directed to qualify the pupils as organists, and several have obtained situations of this kind, while others find employment in teaching music. About 120 pupils are now in the school, and the produce of their labour brings about £1,500, or £2,000 per annum. An institution for the deaf and dumb was founded in 1825. It is situated in Wood Street, near Slater Street, and is calculated to accommodate from sixty to eighty occupants. It is a seminary rather than an asylum. Liverpool is supplied with water by two companies—the Liverpool and Harrington Company, and the Liverpool (Boottle) Company. There are three kinds of docks, the principal of which are the wet docks, which receive those ships in the foreign trade having large cargoes to discharge; the ships in these are afloat at all times of the tide. The dry docks, or basins, are left dry when the tide is out, and receive the vessels that are employed coastwise. The graving docks can be kept dry, or filled with water at pleasure, and are used for repairing ships. All of them have been hollowed from the shore by long continued labour and at vast expense. At the sides of the docks there are spacious warehouses, to the floors of which the goods are craned up, while the space around the docks is used for the loading and unloading of ships, &c. The Canning Dock, formerly called the Dry dock, but now a wet one, has a quay of 500 yards in extent, and is connected with the three graving docks. The Salthouse Dock has a quay 759 yards long, with commodious warehouses. George's Dock is 246 yards in length, and 100 yards in breadth, with a quay of 1000 yards, commodious warehouses and spacious gates. At the south-west corner there is a floating church for seamen, where divine service is performed every Sunday; handsome iron bridges span the north and south passages to this dock. King's Dock, 270 yards long, by 95 broad, has also a floating chapel. Queen's Dock, 470 yards long, and 270½ broad, has a spacious quay, and communicates with an extensive basin, called the Brunswick Half-tide Dock. Brunswick Dock, the largest one in the port, was opened in 1832, and contains an area, including the passages and half-tide dock, of 70,069 square yards; it was originally designed for vessels in the timber trade, and the quays are generally covered with logs of that commodity; the dock itself is a remarkably fine specimen of masonry. Prince's Dock is 500 yards long, and 106 broad, and is built with uncommon strength; it is surrounded by a brick wall, and has a dwelling-house at the north end, for the master; along the western side, next to the river, there is a delightful promenade, called the Marine Parade, 750 yards long, and 11 yards broad, with a stone wall about a yard high along its margin, and three sets of steps to the river. Waterloo Dock and Clarence Dock are spacious and highly commodious. To the north of the latter are the new graving docks, which are handsome and extremely well built; one of them is entirely of granite: there are also two new docks similarly constructed, to the south of Brunswick Dock. The Duke of Bridgewater also possesses a small dock here, and there are commodious basins along the margin of the river for the carriers by water. Double sets of stairs lead to the west of George's and Prince's Docks, for the convenience of passengers by the steam vessels. The dock gates are well constructed, and by them the depth of water in the docks can be regulated. The whole length of the outer river wall is about 2½ miles. Each dock is managed by a harbour-master, while the general superintendence of the dock quays, the loading and unloading of vessels in the docks and the prevention of plunder and disorder, are intrusted to the control of the dock police, who have a certain uniform. There are stations in the various docks containing apparatus for the restoration of drowned persons, &c. The dock-masters, dock-gatemmen, and the general superintendence of the port, are under the direction of the harbour-master. The government of the docks, by an act of parliament of 1825, is vested in a committee of twenty-one persons, including a chairman and deputy-chairman, called "The Committee for the affairs of the Estate of the Trustees of the Liverpool Docks," which meets not less than once in each week. The common council can ratify or reject the proceedings, and appoint the thirteen trustees who are on the committee; the chairman is also elected by the council, and continues in office six years; eight of the committee are nominated from the body of the merchants or ship-owners of the port. The boundary of the port of Liverpool, as fixed by the commissioners in their certificate to the Exchequer in 1723, is as follows:—From the Red stones, in Hoylake, on the point of Wirral southerly, to the foot of the river called Ribble-water in a direct line northerly, and so upon the south side of the said river to Hesketh-bank easterly, and to the river Astland and Douglas there, and so all along the sea coasts of Meols and Formby, into the river Mersey, and all over the rivers Mersey, Irwell, and Weaver. To state the amount of business done in this the second port, not only in Britain, but in the world, would be a futility, for every year adds to its amount and importance; it may therefore suffice to say, that it reaches the value of many millions per annum, and the vessels frequenting the Mersey represent in a manifold degree the commerce of every nation upon the earth. Liverpool is peculiarly commercial in its character, and is not in itself a manufacturing town, but it has several houses for the refining of sugar, an extensive pottery, iron and brass foundries, breweries, soap manufactories, wind-mills and steam-engines for grinding corn, colours, &c., manufactories of iron-chain cables, anchors, &c.; the making of files and watches is also carried on to a great extent. There are also several large establishments for the manufacture of steam-engines, boilers, &c., and for glass staining. To the west and to the south of the town there are numerous slips for the erection of vessels, from which some few ships of war have been launched. The markets of Liverpool are supplied with everything necessary for the convenience, or which can administer to the luxuries, of life. Ireland and Scotland furnish them with grain, horned cattle, sheep, hogs, bacon, and butter; and the Isle of Man, Anglesea, and North Wales, with poultry, eggs, and butter; Cheshire also furnishes large quantities of various articles of enjoyment. Vegetables and fruit are met with in perfection and abundance. The Corn Exchange, a handsome structure, situated in Brunswick Street, is 114 feet long, by 60 feet wide, was erected by subscription. St. John's Market, finished in 1822, is a stupendous building, chiefly of brick, ornamented with stone, and situated in the centre of the town. It is 183 yards long, and 45 broad, forming a covered space of 8,235 yards, and it has eight spacious entrances. The interior is a large, lofty, airy hall, which has four rows of handsome cast-iron pillars, 25 feet high, 116 in number. It contains 58 shops, 6 offices, and an immense number of stalls and stands of various kinds. It is lighted at night by 144 gas-lights; there are four pumps, communicating with excellent wells. A new fish market has recently been erected. St. James's Market, a fine brick building, covered in, contains about 3,000 square yards. St. Martin's Market, which is 213 feet long, by 135 wide, though not so large as St. John's, is a handsomer building; it is also covered in. It has two principal fronts, consisting of porticoes of Grecian Doric, of four columns, and two side entrances, approached by flights of steps. The interior is well ventilated, and contains five avenues. This building, like others of a similar description in the town, was erected by the corporation, at a cost of about £13,000. Besides these, there are other smaller markets in different parts of the town. Liverpool sends two members to parliament, chosen by householders of £10 and upwards, and free burgesses. The first charter that was granted to the town of Liverpool appears to have been given in the 9th year of King John, and that was renewed and enlarged in its powers by numerous others, till the time of William III., whose grant fully incorporated that of Charles I., and was the governing charter of the town till the passing of the municipal reform act; the chief body in the corporation being 41 common councilmen, burgesses, from among whom the mayor, two bailiffs, a recorder, and a town-clerk were chosen—every one who had filled the office of mayor, became, ex officio, an alderman. Under the new act the town is divided into sixteen wards, governed by sixteen aldermen, and forty-eight common councillors. The revenue of the corporation, like the town itself, is the most opulent and splendid in the empire, and it has been expended in a most munificent and judicious manner, a sum amounting to more than £2,000,000 sterling having been spent during the present time in fine improvements of every part of the port. According to the inquiry of the municipal commissioners, the rental derived from other sources than the dock estate was £96,308. 4s. 9d., and that from the dock estate was £201,376. 10s. 11d. Liverpool has its peculiar jurisdiction in some civil cases of damage, the chief of its especial privileges existing in the constitution of the Court of Record, called the "Court of Passage," which was established by prescription, until its proceedings and practice were materially altered and amended since the inquiry at Liverpool—at first by an act passed 30th July, 1834—the mayor and bailiff were the presiding officers, and the court was held once a week by adjournment, but only four times a year—namely, at the quarter-sessions for trial of causes. The constitution of this court, however, is now regulated by acts 4th and 5th Will. IV., c. 92—6th and 7th Will. IV., c. 153—1st Vict., c. 98—1st and 2d Vict., c. 99, as well as by the municipal act, 5th and 6th Will. IV., c. 76, and by a public act, 2d Vict. (session 1839), for the regulation of borough courts. The officers are now the assistant barrister, a chairman, and a registrar, with assistants, besides a sergent-at-mace with a clerk, a crier of the court, a water-bailiff who is also harbour-master of the port, a deputy water-bailiff, and two sub-bailiffs. The assistant-barrister acts as assessor. The mayor for the time being is the judge, but under the local act, 6th and 7th Will. IV., c. 135, the assessor may hold courts for trial of issues, and hearing of motions for new trials and special arguments; and under the local act, 1st Vict., c. 98, the town-clerk, as registrar, may transact all other business. The assistant-barrister was appointed assessor by the Crown; but it appears to be a question, whether by the municipal act the office is not in the council, by whom also the registrar, &c. are appointed. The assistant-barrister's salary is £500 per annum; payable out of the borough fund. The registrar is guaranteed £2,000 per annum as town-clerk, registrar, clerk of the peace, and parliamentary solicitor and attorney. The sergent-at-mace receives £350 per annum, and the inferior officers £20 to £25. The water-bailiff receives no salary. The jurisdiction of this court is in all personal actions, and in certain actions of ejectment between landlord and tenant, and it extends over the whole of the municipal borough, the new boundaries of which coincide with those of the parliamentary borough, and over the whole of the Mersey from Warrington and Frodsham bridges to the mouth of the estuary, and beyond it at sea within certain limits. The proceedings are similar to those of the superior courts at Westminster. The courts for the ordinary recovery of debts have all been influenced by the general county court act. The police force for so large a community is placed under admirable regulations, being managed much on the plan of the metropolitan force, and for its efficient support the large sum of £40,000 a year is not considered too great an outlay. The climate of Liverpool is remarkably healthy. The soil is dry and sandy, and is peculiarly favourable to the growth of potatoes. Among the celebrated natives of this town may be mentioned: Deare, the sculptor, who was born Oct. 18, 1760, and at the age of twenty obtained the gold medal of the Royal Academy for his "Struggle in the air of Satan with the Angel;" he died at an early age. George Stubbs, the celebrated animal painter, and author of a work on the anatomy of the horse, who died in 1806, at upwards of eighty years of age. Jeremiah Horrox, who was born in 1619, and if he had lived would probably have become famous as an astronomer; he discovered the transit of Venus over the sun's disk, and also a new theory of lunar motions, and died at the age of twenty-two. Mrs. Hemans, Mr. Roscoe, Dr. Currie, and his son Mr. W. W. Currie, Rev. W. Shepherd, and a host of others, who if they did not attain the same reputation, strengthened and enriched their country by noble contributions from every faculty of the human mind, and left a munificent legacy to posterity in the works of their genius. —Popⁿ in 1841, 286,487. —Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. LLANBADARN-FAWR, CARDIGAN, a parish, partly in the upper division of the hun^d of Iilar, and partly in the hun^d of Genaur-Glyn, union of Aberystwith, South Wales: the parish includes the townships of Broncastellan, Clarach, Cwmrhedol, Elerch, Melin-dwr, Parcel-Canol, Trefairis, Uchayn-y-dre, Vainor-Uchaf, Vainor-Issa, and In-y-dré-Issa, the hamlets of Llanbadarn-y-Croydden Isaf, and Uchaf, and the chapelry of Aberystwith: 208 miles from London (coach road 212), 1 from Aberystwith, 17 from Tregaron.---Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 90 miles; from Derby, through Birmingham, Worcester, &c., 161 miles.---Money orders issued at Aberystwith: London letters deliv^d. 4½ p.m.; post closes 9 p.m.---The church is a spacious cruciform structure, with a heavy tower at the west end; it is in the Early English style, and is supposed, from its pointed arches, to have been built shortly after the Norman Conquest. There was formerly a bishopric here, founded by St. Paternus, a foreigner; but the inhabitants having, in a feud, killed their bishop, the see was united to that of St. David's, and the church, with its revenues, was given by Gilbert Strongbow, in 1111, to the establishment of St. Peter's at Gloucester, and afterwards to the abbey of Vale Royal, in Cheshire. There is an Independent chapel, and several Calvinistic Methodist chapels in the town. The parochial charities produce about £24 a year, which are applied to educational purposes. There was formerly a market here, but that has been transferred to Aberystwith. The parish is very extensive, being as much as fifteen miles in length, and six in average breadth. A Roman road passes through it, and the outline of several tumuli can be traced in the neighbourhood. Lewis Morris, the celebrated Welsh antiquary, was long a resident in this place. He was born in 1702, the son of a small trader, and rose by skill and perseverance to be largely employed under government as the surveyor of mines, and other property of the crown.---The living (St. Padarn), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Cardigan, and diocese of St. David's, is valued at £20: pres. net income, £135: patron, Bishop of St. David's: pres. incumbent, John Hughes, 1834: contains 1,460 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 11,239: probable popⁿ in 1849, 12,925: ass^d. prop^r. £20,625: poor rates in 1838, £2,431. 6s.

LLANBEDR (or LLAMPETER-PONT-STEPHEN), CARDIGAN, a parish, borough, and market town in the hun^d of Moeddyrn and Troedyrour, union of Lampeter, South Wales: 214 miles from London

(coach road 211), 10 from Tregaron.—Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Cardiff, to Merthyr Tydvil, thence 45 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 205 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 4 p.m.: post closes 7½ a.m.—But very little is known respecting the origin of the borough, but it is generally believed that its designation is derived from a church dedicated to St. Peter, and there are abundant indications of its having at one time been a place of much greater consequence than it is at present, the inhabitants being occasionally spoken of in the Welsh Chronicles as persons of considerable importance. Toward the west of the town, leaden coffins have been at different times dug up in a place supposed to have been the cemetery of St. Thomas's church, of which nothing at the present day remains. A priory, it is believed, once stood where the priory house and garden now are. The fortress of the lords of the district stood at some distance to the westward of the town, and there are now two large mounts enclosed by fosses in the vicinity. A bridge, which spans the river about half a mile south of the town, is said to have been originally erected by King Stephen, and a field close by it still bears the appellation of the King's Meadow. A Roman road ran across the common, and there was a Roman camp at Olwer. Lampeter consists principally of one long street, and its appearance has been greatly improved since the foundation of St. David's College; many respectable houses have been erected, and there is a commodious market-house and inn, and several other places for comfortable accommodation. The church, which is very ancient, is pleasantly situated upon a rising ground, a little to the north of the town; it consists of a nave, side aisle, and chancel, the two former being separated by a row of pointed arches, while the latter is divided from them by an elaborately carved screen. The college of St. David's stands on an elevated site to the eastward of the town. It is a fine quadrangular building, and the chief ornament of the place, and was completed and opened in 1827, chiefly through the exertions of Dr. Burgess, at that time bishop of St. David's, and afterwards bishop of Salisbury, at a cost of about £20,000. Of that sum, £6,000 were contributed by government, £1,000 by King George IV., and the remainder was the produce of subscriptions collected by the bishop during the twenty years in which he had been labouring for this object. The college is incorporated by royal charter, and the bishop of St. David's is appointed visitor. It is endowed with six livings, and contains a house for the principal, apartments for the visitor, rooms for the professors, and accommodation for about seventy students, besides the chapel hall, a library containing upwards of 18,000 volumes, with the customary college offices. The students of St. David's, like those of St. Bees' and Cowbridge, have the privilege of direct admission into holy orders. There is a detached residence for the vice-principal. The college is endowed with six livings, and since the year 1830 it has had several scholarships attached to it. Four of these of £10 each were annually provided for during his life by the late bishop of Salisbury; who farther, at his death, left his library of 9,000 volumes to the college. His widow, Mrs. Burgess, Lord De Dunstanville, and several other munificent persons of property and condition, have, at various times, contributed to the funds of the institution, so that the scholarships range from £10 to £16 a year. The trade of Lampeter, as might be supposed, is chiefly of a local character, consisting simply in the receipt and supply of necessaries for the ordinary business of life; but there is a lead mine in the vicinity belonging to Lord Carrington, the ore of which contains a considerable per centage of silver. The borough of Lampeter is co-extensive with the lordship or manor, but the parish extends considerably beyond this in every direction. Charters were granted to this place as early as the time of Edward II., but the chief governing power is derived from a grant of George III., or rather the Prince Regent, in 1814, and under it courts leet were ordered to be held every Michaelmas and Easter. The quarter sessions for the county are also held here. There are Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodist chapels here; Chapel Lamped chapel was founded in 1770. Under the Reform Act, Lampeter, in conjunction with Cardigan, Adpar, and Aberystwyth, returns one member to parliament. Lampeter is also one of the polling-places for the county member. —The living (St. Peter), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^r. and diocese of St. David's, is valued at £6. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £240: patron, Bishop of St. David's: pres. incumbent, L. The mountains around are lofty and rugged, and in the bosom of the valley there are two small romantic lakes, one of which, fed by the river Afon Hwch, falls in one place in a beautiful cataract 60 feet in height. On the east the pass is bounded by Glider Fawr, and on the west by Snowdon. In the middle of the pass is the ancient castle of Dolbadern, which was for upwards of twenty years the prison of Owen Goch, brother of Llewellyn, the last Prince of Wales. Copper mines and slate quarries are numerous in the parish, and afford employment to a great number of persons; the products being conveyed in flats along the lakes, at the termination of which they are transferred to railway, by which they are carried to Moel-y-Don, on the Menai Strait, whence they are shipped for exportation.

LLANDAFF, GLAMORGAN, a parish and city in the hun^d. of Kibbor, union of Cardiff, South Wales, on the southern bank of the river Tafl, which is here crossed by a bridge, and intersected by the Glamorganshire or Cardiff Canal: the parish, besides the city of Llandaff, comprises the hamlets of Canton, Ely, Fairwater, and Gabalfa: 172 miles from London (coach road 165), 3 from Cardiff.---Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow, to Cardiff, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 163 miles.---Money orders issued at Cardiff: London letters deliv^d at 10 a.m.: post closes 2.40 p.m. This is one of the places, the greatness of which has passed away. Llandaff, though called a city by courtesy, because the site of a cathedral, and the town from which a bishop's see derives its title, is, in fact, nothing more than a straggling village, composed of mean dwellings, here and there intermingled with habitations of a more imposing character. There was formerly a market here, but it has fallen into disuse; and a mart for the sale of vegetables, gathered from the surrounding district, and the supply of which is large and abundant, has been substituted in its stead. The principal object of attraction is, of course, the cathedral, and that is one of very considerable interest, for the see is said to have been founded as early as the year 180, and therefore long before the assumed domination of Augustine, and long prior to the diffusion of Romish errors, though it appears that Llandaff, for some time before the Norman Conquest, acknowledged its fealty to the pope. A church which had stood here for some centuries, but which was destroyed at the Conquest, was rebuilt in 1120, by Bishop Urban, who was a great benefactor to the see. His structure fell in the course of ages into decay, but was thoroughly renovated, and partly rebuilt, in 1751. The cathedral was formerly more extensive than at present, having been circumscribed by the repairs just alluded to, a new western front having been built across the nave, the old front being allowed to perish. The architecture of the ancient building is partly Saxon, with an occasional intermingling of Norman; but the prevailing style is that commonly called Gothic, the western front being very striking, and ornamented with some fine lancet windows of various sizes. Immediately over the principal entrance at this end, on a projecting tablet, there is the figure of a bishop, supposed to represent one of the earlier bishops of the see. Above that, and over the upper range of windows, and near the summit of the building, is another figure, in a sitting posture, holding a book. The whole is surmounted by an ancient cross. On the north side of the edifice there is a rich Saxon doorway, and on the south another doorway, but far less elaborate in its carving. At the western end there were formerly two noble towers, of which that at the northern angle alone remains; two sides of this tower rest on the walls of the church, but the others are supported by two light arches, which rest on a single pillar. In the interior there are some elegant Gothic arches, which separated the nave from the side aisles. The length of the whole structure is 300 feet, and its breadth 80 feet. At the east end of the cathedral is the Lady Chapel, where divine service is sometimes celebrated in Welsh; and on the south side stands the Chapter-house, a square room, the roof of which is supported by a single pillar, from which arches diverge to the several sides of the apartment. The new west front, through a singular incongruity, is of the Grecian order of architecture, and even the altar, until lately, was enclosed under a Grecian portico. In the cathedral are several ancient and striking monuments, some of them in a dilapidated condition, but none are of any great public interest. Close by are the remains of the ancient castellated residence of the bishops, consisting of a large gateway, and part of the external wall; the destruction of this building, and of the principal portion of the church, is attributed to Owen Glendower. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here for the hundred of Kibbor.---The living (St. Peter): popⁿ in 1841, 1,276: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,467: poor rates in 1838, £516. 5s.---Fairs: Feb. 9, and Whit-Monday, for cattle.---At Llandaff is the seat of George Mathew, Esq., to whose ancestors there are many memorials in the cathedral. This gentleman, who is the representative of one of the very oldest families in the kingdom, belongs to a race which for ages has been of historic interest. The founder was Aeddán, Lord of Gromont Castle, in Monmouthshire, whom Llwyd, in his "Royal Tribes," states to have been the fifth son of Gwne-thood, the Great Prince of Cardigan and Gwent. From him was descended Sir Madoc-ap-Caradoc, who was an eminent leader of the Crusaders, and made a knight of the celebrated order of St. Sepulchre. Sir Jevan-ap-Gryffith, ninth Lord of Gromont, married Cecily, a descendant of William the Conqueror. Sir David Mathew, eldest son of Sir Mathew-ap-Jevan, whose tomb in the cathedral is one of the best specimens of the kind of his age, was made grand standard-bearer of England by Edward IV., whose life he is said to have saved at the battle of Towton. Sir John Mathew of Tresungher and Pennytenny, who with his relatives, Sir Richard and Sir Bevil Grenville, took an active part in the civil wars of the 17th century, rebuilt his ancestral mansion at Tresungher, which had been entirely destroyed during the contest. On his death, the representation of the family devolved upon his nephew, Colonel Abednego Mathew, who was made governor of St. Christopher's; in which island, and in Antigua, he received large grants of land, as a recompense for the losses which his family had sustained in the royal service. At his death, the property descended to William Mathew, Esq., who, entering at an early age the Coldstream Regiment, raised by his relative General Monk, afterwards Duke of Albemarle, became highly distinguished during the subsequent war, and was promoted to the command of the regiment at Namur, was afterwards made a knight of the Bath, and captain-general and lord high-admiral of the Leeward Islands. His descendants all held distinguished positions in the country. The present Mr. Mathew has also been a member of the Coldstream Guards, served with distinction as aide-de-camp to his uncle, General Mathew, in America, and was subsequently engaged on a special mission to Napoleon Buonaparte, at the peace of Amiens.

There are several Calvinistic Methodist chapels here. The Roman station of Loventium is supposed to have stood here, several Latin remains and coins having been discovered in the place and neighbourhood. A synod, at which St. David was present, was held here in the year 519. Of this synod Lambard says:—When the great synode was held in Wales for the suppression of the heresy of Pelagius (which, after the opinion of many, was of the college of Bangor), David, then byshop of Meneven, (now St. Davides of his own name,) stoode upon a hille and preached, and duringe the sermon the hill grew sensibly under his feete, (sayethe Gyrald, for I mean neyther to be auctor nor fautor to suche poetrye,) and lifted him up on highe. At which miracle the hole company standinge amazed elected him tharche-bishop; and Dubritius, which was archebishop of Caerleon before, surrendered that honour to David. Gyrald, that told this tale, had not learned the lesson, Mendacem memorem esse oportet; for in the same his itinerarie, wheare he reporteth this, he sayeth that Dubritius resigned to David for his infirmities, being an olde decrepite man, and that the honour was translated to Meneven by favour of Kinge Arthur, whose uncle David was, and that was no miracle at all. I wis his booke was not so longe that he needed any mery tale to refreshe the reader. In 1073, a great battle was fought here between the rival princes of Wales. —The living (St. David), a perpetual curacy, with the curacy of Llanbadarn-Odyen, in the archd^y. of Cardigan, and diocese of St. David's, is valued at £6: pres. net income, £146: patrons, Earl of Lisburne and L. The church, a very ancient structure, stands on an eminence just above the banks of the river Ogwen. Besides other curious memorials, it contains the monument of Archbishop Williams, a man eminently celebrated in the time of Charles I., and who passed through vicissitudes such as it has been the lot of but few men to encounter. He was elevated to the see of Lincoln, became lord-keeper of the privy seal, and was subsequently made archbishop of York. While lord-keeper he was accused of subornation, and tried by his peers, was found guilty, and suffered imprisonment from 1637 to 1640. After his release he was raised to the metropolitenacy of York, and then shortly afterwards banished from the kingdom. He died at the house of Sir Roger Mostyn of Gloddaeth in 1650, in the 68th year of his age. Dr. Davies wrote some lines upon this monument, which appeared in Dodsley's Collection, in which, after an exclamation of surprise, that neither of his two cathedrals could give him burial-room, he pleasingly concludes—

"Envid ambition, what are all thy schemes,
But waking misery or pleasing dreams!
Sliding and tottering on the heights of state,
The subject of this vase declares thy fate.
Great as he was, you see how small the gain,
A burial so obscure, a mus. so mean."

In the latter part of his life he retired to North

Wales, devoted his life to meditation and prayer, and met his death with the peace and fortitude of a Christian. There is a Wesleyan chapel here. The parish is exceedingly mountainous, and contains a vast quantity of roofing slate, the quarries of which are very extensive, and occasion employment to as many as 1,500 men, being the chief support of the population; they have been wrought for upwards of fifty years.---The living (St. Tegai) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Bangor, not in charge: pres. net income, £114: patron, Bishop of Bangor: pres. incumbent, William Morgan, 1846: contains 446 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,010: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,461: ass^d. prop^r. £2,978: poor rates in 1838, £837. 9s.---Penrhyn Castle, one of the most superb private residences in the kingdom, was erected by, and is now the residence of, the Hon. Edward Gordon Douglas Pennant. It is built in the Saxon style, of Anglesey marble. The proprietor, who has represented the county of Carnarvon in the House of Commons for several years, is a brother of the Earl of Morton, and married Juliana-Isabella-Mary, eldest daughter of the late George Dawkins, Esq., who traced his direct descent from Thomas Pennant, son of David ap Tudur Pennant, who was living in the time of Henry VI., and whose descendant, Richard Pennant, Esq., was created Baron Penrhyn of the peerage of Ireland. His lordship died without issue, and the title became extinct, but the estates passed to his cousin, George Hay Dawkins, Esq., father of the lady of the present proprietor, who then assumed the name of Pennant.

It occupies an elevated spot on the western bank of the river Towy, commanding delightful prospects of the vale in both directions, with a fine view to the eastward of the hilly region which divides this county from Glamorganshire. The river is crossed here by a substantial stone bridge of modern erection. The town is named after the saint to whom the church is dedicated, and who, it appears, was a person so eminent for his sanctity, that after his death three places contended for the care of his body: Pen-nalun where his ancestors were buried, Llandilo where he died, and Llandaff where he was born. The contention between the pious inhabitants of these several places being rather sharp, the saint, in order to put a stop to the strife, as the story goes, appeared in three different bodies so truly alike, that no person could distinguish one from the other, and so each place took one. Bishop

Godwin adds for the honour of his own church, "that by frequent miracles at his tomb, it appeared that the inhabitants of Llandaff possessed the true body." The church is an ancient structure. Lord Dynevor has lately erected a chapel of ease at his own expense. The Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists, the Independents and the Baptists, have places of worship here. One of the schools here has a small endowment. There are some woollen manufactories, corn-mills and tanning establishments in the town, and several calcareous and chalybeate springs in the parish, one of which called Ffynnan Craig Ceffyl, possesses valuable medicinal properties. Llandilo Vawr is one of the polling-places for the county members. The Llandilo poor-law union comprises twelve parishes, with a population of about 17,000 persons. Within a short distance of Llandilo are the remains of Dynevor castle, now a picturesque ruin, mantled with ivy, and forming, with the striking scenery by which it is surrounded, one of the most beautiful places in the Principality; it is celebrated as having been the residence of the Prince of South Wales. It was originally built by Roderic the Great, who bequeathed it to his son Cadell, by whose successors the seat of government was removed to Carmarthen until the progress of the English arms, and the settlement of the Anglo Norman invaders along the coast obliged them to return to Dynevor, which was one of the last places held by the descendants of Roderic, and near which the final contest for the independence of Wales took place, when Llewellyn was signally defeated by Edward I. in 1282. At some distance from the castle, and within the circuit of the park, stands Newton House, the seat of Lord Dynevor. The mansion is of modern date. The park comprises a considerable extent of ground, and exhibits perhaps a richer display of varied landscape than any spot of similar size in the kingdom. The surface of the upper park is diversified by gentle undulations, and has been planted with great judgment and taste, while the abrupt hill which rises from the meadows on the banks of the Towy, is clothed with noble masses of the finest forest trees, whose majestic forms and gnarled branches beautifully harmonize with the olden towers which they envelop. The grounds are seen to the best advantage from the opposite side of the river, but indeed there is no aspect under which they can be viewed in which they do not appear most strikingly beautiful. Dyer, in his poem entitled Grongar Hill, has thus partly described them:—

"Gaudy as the opening dawn,
Lies a long and level lawn,
On which a dark hill, steep and high,
Holds and charms the wandering eye!
Deep are his feet in Towy's flood,
His sides are clothed with waving wood,
And ancient towers crown his brow,
That cast an awful look below,
Whose rugged walls the ivy creeps,
And with her arms from falling keeps.
'Tis now the raven's bleak abode,
'Tis now th' apartment of the toad;
And there the fox securely feeds,
And there the poisonous adder breeds,
Concealed in ruins, moss, and weeds;
While ever and anon there fall
Huge heaps of hoary mouldered wall.
Yet time has seen, that lifts the low,
And level lays the lofty brow—"

Has seen this broken pile complete,
Big with the vanity of state,—
But transient is the smile of fate."

Lord Dynevor traces his descent, in a direct line, from Uryan, Prince, or, as he was sometimes called, King of Reged, Lord of Kidwelly, Carnullo, and Yakenen, in South Wales, who married Margaret La Faye, daughter of Gorlois, Duke of Cornwall, and was ancestor of Sir Elidir Ddu, a knight of the Sepulchre, in the time of Richard I. Sir Elidir was great-grandfather of Griffith-ap-Nicholas, who had two sons, one of whom founded the families of Bowen of Llechdwywnny, and of Roos, now seated at Killymaenliwyd. From the elder son and heir, Thomas, father of the famed Sir Rhys-ap-Thomas, descended, through a long line of distinguished progenitors, Griffith Rice, Esq. of Newton, M.P. for the county of Carmarthen, in the times of William III. and Queen Anne, whose son, George Rice, Esq., married Lady Cecil, only daughter of William, second baron and first Earl Talbot, who, having no surviving male issue, was in 1780 created Baron Dynevor of Dynevor, with remainder to his daughter. Her ladyship succeeded to the title in 1783, and assumed, in accordance with the will of her mother, the name and arms of Cardonnell only; but on her decease, her eldest son, the present peer, resumed his ancestral name of Rice. His lordship, who succeeded as third baron in 1798, is lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of his county, and is also colonel of the Carmarthen-shire Militia. —The living (St. Teilo), a vicarage in the archd^y of Carmarthen, is valued at £16: pres. net income, £512: patron, Bishop of St. David's: pres. incumbent, J. LLANDOVERY (or LLANYMTHERVEE), CARMARTHEN, a borough and market town in the parish of Llandingat, union of Llandovery, South Wales: 234 miles from London (coach road 191), 15 from Lampeter. — Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow, to Neath, thence 28 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 225 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 11.25 a.m.: post closes 12½ p.m. — The name of this place is believed to be a corruption of the Welsh term Llan-ym-Ddyfroed, which means "the church among the waters," and appears to be derived from the position of the parish church Llandingat, which is situated on a flat promontory, between the united streams of the Bran and Gwydderid and the river Tywi, a little above their confluence; over the last of these there are two bridges, one of which is built of stone, and the other is a suspension bridge. The town consists of several streets, and the houses are, for the most part, highly respectable in appearance; the High Street, especially, being a broad and handsome avenue, many improvements having been made during the last few years. The church of Llandingat stands in the town; that of Llanfarybryn occupies an eminence at a short distance, but within the limits of the borough. The origin of the town is ascribed by some authorities to the neighbouring Roman station of Llan-fair-y-Brynn, but others believe that it was more likely to be owing to the castle, which was erected here soon after the Conquest, and which was ruined during the contest between Charles I. and his parliament. Some of the ruins still remain, on the top of a hill nearly in the centre of the town, and give it a very picturesque appearance. The trade of Llandovery consists in the supply of domestic necessities to its inhabitants and those of the surrounding country, by whom its weekly markets and fairs are very largely attended. The Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists and the Baptists, all have chapels here. The principal parochial benefaction is the Poor's Grove, a tract of about 80 acres of woodland in which the indigent inhabitants, especially such as are burgesses, have the privilege of cutting firewood. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here, and the lord of the manor occasionally holds courts-leet. Llandovery has been incorporated ever since the time of Richard III., and the charter given by him in 1485 was the governing one until the passing of the municipal reform act, when four aldermen and twelve common councillors were appointed to act under the usual corporate style; their public income is very trifling. The town is one of the polling-places for the county. The Llandovery poor law union comprises eleven parishes, with a population of about 15,000 persons. Llandovery was the birthplace of the Rev. Roes Prichard, vicar of Llandingat, but better known by the name of "Vicar of Llandovery," a man whose writings have obtained an almost unexampled degree of popularity in his native country. He was born about the year 1579, was admitted at Jesus College, Oxford, in 1597, was ordained a priest in 1602, and took his degree of bachelor of arts in the same year. In the month of August he was presented by the bishop of St. David's to the vicarage of his native place, and was also instituted, in 1613, through the gift of the crown, to the rectory of Llanedy. In the next year he was made a prebendary of the collegiate church at Brecknock, and in 1626, was appointed chancellor of the diocese of St. David's. He died in 1644, and was buried in his own church. He translated several religious tracts into the Welsh language; but the work which obtained for him his great celebrity, was the "Canwyll y Cymry," or "The Welshman's Candle;" or, as it is more generally called, "Llyfr-y-Ficer," or "The Vicar's Book." This publication consists of a moderately sized 8vo volume, and contains a hundred and seventy poems on religious subjects. Wood calls them "pious carols," and their great excellence consists in the plainness of their language and the musical rhythm of the construction, circumstances which have made them familiar to almost every person of all classes in the country, so that "the Vicar's Book," is almost invariably the companion of the Bible in the cottages in Wales. The neighbourhood of Llandovery is enlivened by several gentlemen's villas. Contains 335 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,709: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,965: ass^d prop^r £2,414: poor rates in 1837, with the parish. Market day, Friday. Fairs: April 17, June 5, August 2, October 22, and November 16, for cattle and pigs; grand market, second Saturday in each month. Bankers: D. Jones & Co.—draw on Jones, Lloyd, & Co.

LLANDRILLO, MEXIONETH, a parish and village in the hun^d of Edernion, union of Corwen, North Wales, on the river Dee: 197 miles from London (coach road 199), 5 from Corwen, 14 from Llangollen. Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton and Shrewsbury to Oswestry station; Llangollen road thence, 20 miles: from Derby, through Stafford, Shrewsbury, &c., 112 miles. Money orders issued at Corwen: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. The Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists and Independents have chapels here. The parochial charity of £3. 7s. per annum has been lost to the parish for some years. The living (St. Trillo), a disch^d vicarage, in the archd^y of Montgomery, and diocese of St. Asaph, is valued at £7. 17s. 1d.: pres. income of vicar, according to commutation, £171. 13s. 4d.: rectorial tithes (a sinecure), now in the holding of ecclesiastical commissioners for England, amount, per commutation, to £343. 6s. 8d.: patron, Bishop of St. Asaph: pres. incumbent, John Wynne: contains 181 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 875: ass^d prop^r £4,334: poor rates in 1849, £424. Tithes commuted in 1840. Fairs: Feb. 25, June 29, August 28, and November 14, for sheep and horses.

LLANDRILLO-YN-RHOS, DENBIGH, a parish, partly in the hun^d of Is-Dulas, in the above county, and partly in the hun^d of Crenyddyn, union of Conway, county of Carnarvon: the parish includes the township of Eirias: 229 miles from London (coach road 233), 4 from Conway, 15 from St. Asaph. chapel here. The parochial benefactions produce about £14. 10s. per annum. The living (St. Trillo), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of St. Asaph, is valued at £8. 15s. 10d.: pres. net income, £343: patron, Bishop of St. Asaph: pres. incumbent, Thomas Parry, 1843: popⁿ in 1841, 1,176: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,352: poor rates in 1838, £741.

LLANDRINDOD (or LLAN-Y-DRINDOD), RADNOR, a parish in the hun^d of Kevenleece, union of Builth, South Wales, east of the river Ithon: 173 miles from London (coach road 172), 7 from Pen-y-bont, 6 from Builth. Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 55 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Worcester, &c., 126 miles. Money orders issued at Rhayador: London letters deliv^d 12½ p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. This place owes its origin, and the degree of importance which it possesses, to three of its wells, which rise from springs within a few yards of each other, but pour forth waters altogether different from each other in character, being severally chalybeate, cathartic, and sulphureous in their nature. Their beneficial qualities were known to the inhabitants as early as the beginning of the last century, and persons from a distance began to use them for sanitary purposes about the year 1726. In 1749, lodging-houses and other accommodations for visitors began to be erected, and the reputation of the waters for the restoration or improvement of health was established. These springs are denominated according to their properties. That called the Rock Water issues from a slate rock, and is strongly impregnated with iron, salts, earth, and sulphur: it is especially useful in all complaints resulting either from weakness of the animal fibre or from nervous debility. The saline spring is efficacious for scorbutic eruptions and the gravel. The Sulphur or Black water is used both for bathing and internally; when applied externally it is found beneficial in cases of chronic disorder; it is taken with advantage for ulcerous, leprous, gouty, and rheumatic complaints. There are some trifling charities here. Lead is found to some extent in the parish. The living (the Holy Trinity), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Brecon, and diocese of St. David's, is valued at £6: pres. net income, £48: patron, Prebendary thereof: pres. incumbent, T. Thoresby, 1845: contains 38 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 270: ass^d prop^r £998: poor rates in 1838, £102. 15s. Tithes commuted in 1840.

Griffith, 1829: contains 89 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 485: ass^d. prop^r. £1,684: poor rates in 1838, £270. 5s.

LLANDUDNO, CARNARVON, a parish in the hun^d. of Creuddyn, union of Conwy, North Wales, on the coast of St. George's Channel: 228 miles from London (coach road 236), 6 from Conway, 11 from Abergeloe. — Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Chester, to Conway, thence 6 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 128 miles. — Money orders issued at Conway: London letters deliv^d. 3½ p.m.: post closes 9½ a.m. — The parochial charities produce about £17 a year. There are extensive copper mines in the parish, which cause employment to a great number of persons in this and the adjoining places. The promontory of Gogarth, which is so well known to the navigators of this part of the coast, presents a grand precipitous front to the sea; the action of the waves having excavated great caverns, vast both in depth and height, in the bases of the cliffs. Gulls, cormorants, herons, razor-bills, and other species of aquatic birds, have taken up their abode on the most inaccessible of the crags; and even the peregrine falcon, once so valued for sporting purposes, still continues a denizen of these rocks. Rock samphire is abundantly gathered from the precipice of the promontory, of which Shakspeare has given in his description of Dover Cliff, in King Lear, a beautiful picture—

"Come on, Sir; here's the place. Stand still. How fearful
And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs that wing the midway air
Show scarce so gross as beetles. Halfway down
Hangs one that gathers samphire: dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than his head.
The fishermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark Diminished to her boat, her boat a buoy
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring surge
That on the unnumbered idle pebbles chafes
Cannot be heard so high;—I'll look no more Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong."

On an eminence here called Dinas, there is a circular space, surrounded by a wall of prodigious thickness. Within there are several round caves, which are supposed to have been the abodes of the aborigines of the country; they resemble the Troglodytes of Ethiopia. Near to this curious evidence of a remote era, is the Maen Sigl, or Self-Rocking Stone, a huge mass, enclosed by a fosse, and approached by a narrow pathway. — The living (St. Tudno), a perpetual curacy in the archd^r. of Anglesey and diocese of Bangor, not in charge: pres. net income, £120: patrons, Archdeacon of Merioneth, and Bishop of Bangor: pres. incumbent, J. L. Williams, 1845: contains 121 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,047: ass^d. prop^r. £981: poor rates in 1838, £224.

West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow, to Llanelly station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 215 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 4 p.m.: post closes 7½ a.m.---The town, which is irregularly built, has undergone great improvement of late years, many old and dilapidated dwellings having been removed, and excellent dwelling-houses and good ranges of shops having been erected in their stead. A new and convenient market-house has been built by Mr. Chambers, the lord of the layage at the port, and a very large landed proprietor, who resides within the town. A number of new houses have also been built along the road to Cao Mawr Issa. The church is a singular edifice, having two towers, one of which terminates in an embattled parapet, while the other is surmounted by a spire. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. The neighbourhood of the place abounds in mineral produce, and Llanelly therefore has an active and thriving trade. The principal article of export is coal, in the working of which more than 500 persons are constantly employed. The shipments of the produce they raise amount to as much as 170,000 tons per annum. The coal is of fine quality, and besides being largely supplied coastwise for home consumption, is sent to Malta, Marsilles, Odessa, Constantinople, Suez, Mocha, Bombay, Bahia, and other distant ports, being extensively used for the formation of steam, especially in vessels. The other commerce of the place consists in the export of iron, copper-cake, and sheathing, and the importation of copper ore. There are several iron and copper works in the town and neighbourhood, and a trade for the supply of the district is carried on in grain. The amount of the customs dues received at the port reaches to between £5,000 and £6,000 a year. The markets are well supplied with provisions. Great enterprise has been exhibited in facilitating the trade of the place, by the construction of docks and railways. Of the former, one is a floating basin, capable of admitting vessels of 170 or 180 tons register; another can admit vessels of 500 tons register. The graving dock of the railway is admirably constructed, and a breakwater extends from one end of it, which enables vessels to lie at all times in smooth water. Each dock has a scouring reservoir attached to it, and there is besides these a reservoir of great capacity for scouring the harbour and the channel. The Llanelly railway traverses a rich mineral district as far as Llandilo Vawr; it is twenty-six miles in length, and was constructed at an expense of £270,000. It was at first intended only for the transit of goods, but an excellent passenger traffic developed itself soon after the opening of the line. Llanelly is a borough, having a portreeve and burgesses, who have a public income of about £425 a year, but whence or on what account they acquired their corporate capacity does not clearly appear. The town is lighted with gas, and is well supplied with water. In conjunction with Carmarthen it now returns one member to parliament. The Llanelly poor-law union comprises nine parishes, with a population of about 16,500 souls.---The living (St. Elliw), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. of Carmarthen, and diocese of St. David's, is valued at £6. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £96: patron, R. The town-hall, a neat brick building, with a covered area for a market underneath, was built by the proceeds of a sale of the common lands, disposed of for the purpose, by act of parliament. The church is a brick building, altogether destitute of architectural beauty. The Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists, the Baptists and the Independents, have places of worship here. Benefactions have been left for the support of schools, by Mr. Thomas, Mrs. Vaughan, and Lady Strange-ways, for the purpose of educating the poor. Llanfyllin was incorporated by Llewelyn-ap-Gryffydd, in the time of Edward II.; and a charter was granted to it by Charles II., whose deed appears to have directed and consolidated the governing power, but the borough is not included in any of the schedules of the municipal reform act. It joins with Montgomery in sending a representative to parliament, and is one of the polling-places for the county. A workhouse has been erected here, which is capable of accommodating 250 inmates. The Llanfyllin poor-law union comprises 23 parishes, with a population of about 20,000 persons.---The living (St. Myllin), a rectory in the archd^r and diocese of St. Asaph, is valued at £10. 13s. 6½d.: pres. net income, £485: patron, Bishop of St. Asaph: pres. incumbent, D. Williams, 1821: contains 3,700 acres: 83 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 535: ass^d prop^r £3,971: poor rates in 1838, £279. 14s. Llangibby Castle is the seat of William Addams Williams, Esq., who, for several years, represented the county of Monmouth in the House of Commons. Mr. Williams is a descendant of Caradog Vauchfras, or Cradoc Fraich Fras, which means, "Cradoc with the strong hand," who was, in right of his father, lord of Gloucester, and the grandson of Brychan Breheiniog, prince and lord of Brecknock, a contemporary with King Arthur, who lived about the year 490, one of the knights of his round table, and lord-keeper of "ye Castell Dolorus," or the Dolorous tower. Cradoc was lord of Brecon after the death of all the sons of Brychan; he was also lord of Fferregg, or Fferlex, which lies between the Severn and the Wye, having obtained it by conquest previous to his entry into Wales. Cradoc was the direct ancestor of Gwymgy ap Gwenddy, who was king of Fferreg and Brecknock, whose great-grandson, Maenyrch ap Drifflin, lord of Brecon, was the founder of many distinguished families in Wales; and whose descendant, through a long series of ages, Sir Rowland Williams, Knt., of Llangibby Castle, was high sheriff of the county in the time of James I. The grandson of that gentleman, Trevor Williams, Esq., was created a baronet for his eminent services in the cause of Charles I.; but his descendant, Sir John Williams, dying without male issue, the title went to his brother, Sir Leonard, who dying childless, the baronetcy expired, but the estates had previously passed to Ellen, the daughter of Sir John, who, in 1748, married William Addams, Esq., of Monmouth, who assumed the additional surname of Williams. Of that gentleman, the present proprietor of Llangibby is the grandson. Mr. Williams, who has been high sheriff of the county, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of Monmouthshire.

LLANGOLLEN, DENBIGH, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Chirk, union of Corwen, North Wales: 179 miles from London (coach road 184), 23 from Chester. — Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton and Shrewsbury to Llangollen station: from Derby, through Stafford and Shrewsbury, &c., 95 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. — The town is situated on the banks of the river Dee, which is here crossed by a bridge of five arches, erected in 1357 by Bishop Trevor. The parish is divided into three separate traian or districts, termed, respectively, Langollen-traian, Trevor-traian, and Traian-y-Glynn; the two first, which lie contiguous to each other, are divided from the last by an intervening mountain; they had but one church in common, although each district has its own churchwarden. A new church has lately been erected in Glynn-traian, called Pontfadoc. The town, situated in the romantic and very beautiful vale to which it gives its name, wears only a dingy and forbidding aspect, from the dark-coloured shale-stone and slate of which the houses are built. It is, however, much frequented by visitors, on account of the remarkable natural beauties by which it is surrounded. In the church there is nothing worthy of notice—it is a homely structure, with a square tower at the west end; but the churchyard will amply repay any one for the trouble of pacing it, by the splendid panorama of nature which there lays open to view. The principal trade of the place consists in the manufacture of flannels, but there are also three mills for the making of what are more particularly termed woollen cloths. The county magistrates hold their meetings here. Considerable remains of the ancient castle of Dinas Bran, or Crow Castle, still exist, nearly covering the hill on which that fortress stood. Near here, also, are the beautiful ruins of Vale Crucis Abbey. Though terribly mutilated, they yet present some fine remains of the pointed order of Gothic architecture, and seem as if they had been placed in the very spot on which they stand for the purpose of picturesque effect. The abbey was founded by Madog a Gryffydd Maelor, Prince of Powys, for the monks of the Cistercian order, and at the general dissolution of the monasteries had a revenue of £214. 3s. 5d. Llangollen is one of the polling-places for the county. — The living (St. Collen), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of St. Asaph, is valued at £9. 11s. 10½d.: pres. net income, £422, a house, and seven acres of glebe: patron, Bishop of St. Asaph: pres. incumbent, W. Rail. through Wolverhampton and Shrewsbury to Newtown, thence 14 miles: from Derby, through Stafford, Shrewsbury, &c., 121 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 2½ p.m.: post closes 8½ a.m. — Llanidloes is situated in a pleasant vale, watered by the river Severn, over which there are here two bridges, one of them a handsome stone structure, of three arches, and is surrounded by high hills on every side. It consists of two principal streets, which cross each other at right angles, having several inferior ones branching from them in various directions. Until within the last half century the town presented the aspect of one of those old places which took their building date from the time of the Tudors, but the lath and mud houses, with their toppling roofs, have, in most of the chief places, given way to erections of a more substantial kind. The church is noted for its roof of curiously carved oak. The town-house or hall, which occupies a central position, is a large building formed in the old framework style. In the vicinity of the town there are several handsome residences, but Llanidloes also derives an advantage from the circumstance that tourists who desire to explore the great mountain of Plinlimmon, generally take their departure for that purpose from here. The principal manufacture of this town is that of flannel, which has been extensively carried on from a remote period, and there are therefore several fulling mills and factories for carding and spinning the wool. The flannel is in high repute, and during the process of its manufacture, fills as many as nearly a thousand looms, the quantity made being between 9,000 and 10,000 pieces. Besides this business, however, there are a number of tan-yards about the town, flour mills, and malt kilns; in fact it forms the centre of a considerable district, for which it is the chief depot of the ordinary necessities of life. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists all have chapels here. The parochial charities produce about £53 per annum. No corporate charter was discovered in the course of the municipal inquiry, but Llanidloes appears to have been a borough by prescription from a very remote period, the county magistrates having the legal jurisdiction of the place. By the municipal act it is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors; they have a public income of about £130 a year. This town was formerly a contributory borough with Montgomery, a privilege which was restored to it by the Reform Act, after it had been a century in abeyance. The living (St. Idloes), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Bangor, is valued at £4. 3s. 4d.: patron, Bishop of Bangor: pres. incumbent, Evan Pughe, 1837: contains 780 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,261: probable popⁿ in 1849, 4,900: ass^d. prop^y. £5,176: poor rates in 1838, £2,484. 3s. The patriarch is represented as extended on his back, with the genealogical tree issuing from his loins, comprising all the monarchs of Israel and Judah, down to the advent of our Saviour; the branches encircling the kings are covered with diversified foliage. The colours are remarkably brilliant, and form a beautiful decoration to the church, bringing to mind those beautiful lines of Bishop Lowth, written when he was almost a boy, on Winchester college chapel:—

"Thy strokes, great artist, so sublime appear,
They check our pleasure with an awful fear,
While through the mortal line the God you trace,
Author himself, and heir of Jesse's race;
In raptures we admire thy bold design,
And, as the subject, own the hand divine.
While through thy work the rising day shall stream,
So long shall last thine honour, praise, and name;
And oh! till earth and seas, and heav'n decay,
Nef^r may that fair creation fade away:
May winds and storms those beauteous colours spare,
Still may they bloom, as permanent as fair,
All the vain rage of wasting time repel,
And His tribunal see whose crosses they paint so well."

Money orders issued at Cardiff and Pontypidd: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. The town is situated on an acclivity of considerable height, on the borders of the great coal basin of Wales, and commands an extensive prospect of the Vale of Glamorgan. The streets are narrow, and most of the houses are old, and bear little of the aspect of modern improvement. A neat town-hall and market-place were built by the late Marquis of Bute. The church is a spacious edifice in the Norman style of architecture. There are several dissenting chapels in the place. Under the will of Sir Leoline Jenkins, the parish receives £20 every fourth year; the other charities produce about £5 per annum. The borough, including the town, but not the whole of the parish, which is very extensive, being ten miles long, and in some places 5 miles wide, was incorporated by Richard, Earl of Warwick, in the time of Henry VI. The corporation consisted of the constable of the castle, the steward, the portreve, aldermen, and other office-bearers. The castle, which never could have been very considerable, is now in ruins, but it will always be interesting, from the beautiful views which can be seen from its site. Under the Reform Act, Llantrisant unites with Cardiff, and Cowbridge, in returning one member to parliament. There are several collieries near the town, and the district abounds with lead and iron ores. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held here. Sir Leoline Jenkins was a native of this parish, and was the son of a small freeholder, whose christian name of Jenkins he assumed for his own surname, as was the custom at that period. He received the rudiments of his education at Cowbridge, whence in the year 1641 he was removed to Jesus College, Oxford, but having, during the civil war which broke out shortly afterwards, espoused the royal cause, he was compelled to leave the university, and return to his native county. There he was protected and sheltered for some time by Sir John Aubrey, of Llantryddid, the great benefactor of the partisans of Charles. The contest continuing, he left the country and travelled for three years on the Continent, but returned at the restoration of monarchy to his old college, of which, upon the death of Dr. Maunsell, he was made the principal. During the Dutch war, his profound knowledge of civil and maritime law, procured for him the office of Judge of the Court of Admiralty, and in 1668, the Archbishop of Canterbury, at the request of the king, Charles II. made him judge of his Prerogative Court. He was subsequently sent to France, to settle the affairs of Henrietta, the king's mother, went ambassador to Cologne and Nimeguen, and on his return was elected one of the representatives of the university of Oxford. In 1680 he was made a privy councillor, and appointed secretary of state. He died in 1685, and not having been married, left the bulk of his property to his own college; the remainder he left to charitable uses, and towards the endowment of Cowbridge School. — The living (St. Illtyd, St. Tyfodwg, and St. Gwnno), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Llandaff, is valued at £26. 14s. 2d.: pres. net income, £649: patron, Dean and Chapter of Gloucester: present incumbent, Evan Morgan, 1845: contains 256 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,222: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,705: ass^d. prop^r. £9,319: poor rates in 1838, £994. Calamine, manganese, lead, and lime, are found in the parish. — The living (St. Illtyd), a disch^d. rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Llandaff, is valued at £8. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £165: patron, Sir T. D. Aubrey: pres. incumbent, R. T. Tyler, 1839: contains 45 houses:

popⁿ in 1841, 228: ass^d. prop^r. £1,517: poor rates in 1838, £147. 13s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — Llantrithyd Hall is the seat of Sir Thomas Digby Aubrey, Bart., who, according to Vincent, Windsor Herald in the time of Elizabeth, is descended from the blood royal of France, his ancestor, Saint Aubrey, having come over with William the Conqueror. Sir Reginald, his son, assisted Bernard de Newmarch in the subjugation of part of Wales, and received the lands of Abercynfig and Slough for his part of the spoil. From him was descended William Aubrey, LL.D., regius professor of law at Oxford, one of the council for the marches of Wales, and one of the Masters of Requests for Queen Elizabeth; and whose grandson, Sir John Aubrey, was created a baronet in 1660, for his zealous and disinterested loyalty to Charles I. From that gentleman the present honourable representative of the family, who succeeded as seventh baronet on the death of his uncle in 1826, is a lineal descendant.

LONDON AND ITS HISTORY.

London is situated on an extensive plain, bounded on the north by the Highgate and Hampstead hills, and on the south by the Surrey hills. Its situation is admirably adapted for all the purposes of commerce, as it is built upon the river Thames, at a distance of about sixty miles from its mouth. From the Middlesex bank of the river, the buildings rise gradually, forming a kind of amphitheatre, as far up as the steepes of Highgate; on the Surrey side, the district is perfectly flat, having at one time been a mere marsh, from the river to the base of the Surrey hills. The soil on both sides of the river is composed of gravel and clay, with a mixture of loam and sand. The climate is temperate, but variable and inclined to moisture. The mean breadth of the Thames at London is a quarter of a mile; its depth is about twelve feet at low water, and from twenty-five to thirty feet at high water. When spoken of in its large sense, as the metropolis of the British Empire, and including Westminster and Southwark, with portions of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, London is of vast magnitude; the City, properly so called, forming but a comparatively small portion of the whole place. Its extent, comprising those suburbs which are joined to it by buildings, is about eight miles from north to south, or from Highgate to Denmark hill; about nine miles from Upper Clapton to Chelsea, or from N. E. to S. W.; and about eight miles from N. W. to S. E., or from Hampstead to Reckham: from W. to E., or from Paddington to Greenwich, is about 10 miles; and from S. W. to N. E., or from Stratford-le-Bow to Chelsea, is also about 12 miles. The line of buildings on the Surrey side of the river extend for about 12 miles, from Battersea Fields to Greenwich. Additions, however, are every day being made to the immense mass of houses comprised within the above limits, and it is impossible to say what may in some years be the boundaries of this vast accumulation of human habitations.

Geoffrey of Monmouth, and the other dubious writers, say that London was founded by Brute, a great grandson of Æneas, who called it Troy-novant, or New Troy, and that it was surrounded with walls by King Lud, who gave it the name of Caer-Lud, or Lud's-town; of this, however, we have no authentic proof. The oldest mention of London is contained in Caesar's Commentaries, where it is supposed to be alluded to as Civitas Trinobantum, the city of the Trinobantes; and it is the opinion of some authorities, that the ancient Watling Street was a British road before it was used as the Prætorian way by the people whom Caesar led into Britain; there is, therefore, scarcely any doubt that London was the site of a city of the Britons, and a place of the very highest antiquity, having been founded soon after the immigration of the aborigines into the island. The derivations of its name are various. Pennant maintains that it is drawn from the British words Llyn-din, the City on a Lake, being so called from the appearance of the river Thames, when it covered the low grounds on the Surrey side. Other authorities derive it from Lun-den, the City in a Grove, from the forest land which bordered the northern banks of the river, and rose as far as the wood-crowned heights of Hampstead. One of these two would seem to be the most probable derivation. Camden supposes it to be derived from the British Llong-dinas, a city of ships; Erasmus, from Lindus, a city in Rhodes; Maitland, from Lon, a plain, and Don, a hill; and Selden, from Llan-Dien, a temple of Diana. Tacitus, in his Annals, gives an account of the revolt of the British queen Boadicea, and speaks of Londonium, or Colonia Augusta, as the chief residence of merchants, and the great mart of trade and commerce. It was probably called Augusta by the Romans, from its being the capital of a conquered province, several of the continental cities having had the same appellation. Pennant says, that in the time of the Britons an immense forest originally extended to the river side, and even as late as the reign of Henry II. covered the northern neighbourhood of the city, and was filled with various species of beasts of chase. It was defended naturally by fosses, one formed by the creek which ran along Fleet ditch; the other, afterwards known by that of Walbrook. The south side was guarded by the Thames, the north they might think sufficiently protected by the adjacent forest. Wall-brook has now ceased to exist, and the Fleet ditch is arched over and used as a sewer. Under the sway of the Romans, London increased in wealth and importance; and, although, when abandoned by the Roman general Suetonius Paulinus, it was almost destroyed by Boadicea, we find that, in the reign of the Emperor Severus, it was the metropolis of Britain, and in 359 there were 800 vessels employed in the port of London for the exportation of corn alone. The original walls of London were probably founded by Constantine the Great, at the request of his mother Helena, for several coins of that empress have been found under them. They commenced at a fort on the site of the present Tower of London, extending along the Minories to Houndsditch, Bishopsgate Churchyard, and Aldersgate; thence to Christchurch Hospital, and Old Newgate; then south to Ludgate, and by the side of Fleet Brook to Baynard's Castle, another fort by the Thames; this circuit comprehended about two miles and a furlong. The walls were high and strong, defended by towers, and had four principal gates opening to the four great military roads. There are now few vestiges of it, the principal one being at the back of Ludgate Hill, and in Cripplegate Churchyard. Numerous Roman remains of all kinds have at different times been found in London, attesting the grandeur of the works carried on here by that nation, and it is supposed by Whittaker that the first embankment of the Thames is attributable to them. At the end of four centuries from Caesar's invasion, the Romans were obliged to withdraw their forces from Britain, in consequence of the internal disturbances of the empire, and London again became a solely British town. It remained so until the establishment of the Saxon kingdom of Essex, with the exception of a short period when it was possessed by Hengist. When the East Saxons were converted to Christianity, London became the bishop's see, and the first cathedral church was erected on the site of the present St. Paul's. Melitus, appointed in 604, was the first bishop. During the heptarchy, London was injured by frequent fires, the principal one occurring in 798. In 833, after the union of the Saxon kingdom by Egbert, a wittenagemot or parliament was held here. Soon afterwards the city was plundered, and the inhabitants massacred, by the Danes, who also possessed it at the commencement of Alfred's reign, but were, in 884, driven away by that monarch, who strengthened the city, and laid the foundation of the present municipal government. The Saxons called it Lundenceastre, and afterwards Lundone. It was afterwards alternately possessed by the Danes and the Saxons, but it must have greatly increased in opulence, for in the reign of Edmund Ironside, out of an impost of £83,000 Saxon levied upon the English, London furnished £11,000. William, Duke of Normandy, after the defeat of Harold in 1066, advanced to London, but was refused admission by the citizens, who had declared for Edgar Atheling. The two archbishops and the clergy having, however, declared in William's favour, the opposition of the Londoners was removed, and on Christmas-day he was crowned King of England at Westminster. He granted the citizens a charter, which still exists in the city archives, and is written in Saxon characters on a slip of parchment, six inches long and one broad; the translation is as follows: William the King greeteth William the Bishop, and Godfrey the Portreeve, and all the burgesses within London, friendly. And I acquaint you that I will that ye be all there law-worthy, as ye were in King Edward's days. And I will that every child be his father's heir, after his father's days. And I will not suffer that any man do you any wrong. God preserve you. The city suffered severely by fire in 1077. In 1100, Henry I. granted a charter to it, with several important privileges, one of which was the perpetual sheriffwick of Middlesex. During the contest between the Empress Maud and Stephen, the citizens took part with the latter. In the reign of Henry II., large sums of money were extorted from them. From the account given of the city in this reign by Fitzstephen, a monk of Canterbury, it would appear to have been opulent and prosperous, possessing, as he says, abundant wealth, great grandeur, and magnificence. On the coronation of Richard I., numbers of the Jews in London were massacred by the brutal populace. In the reign of this monarch, the chief magistrate of London, who had formerly been called a portreeve, and then a bailiff, had his title changed to that of mayor—Henry Fitz-Alwyn was the first who filled this office. Richard also granted the city two charters; for one of which, that of 1195-6, which provided for the removal of all weirs upon the Thames, he was paid £1,500. John granted the city several charters; but in the latter part of his reign, the Londoners took part with the barons against him. In Magna Charta it was stipulated that the city of London should have all its ancient privileges, as well by land as by water. Henry III. granted nine charters to the citizens in the course of his reign. In 1258, we learn from the Chronicles of Evesham, that corn was so dear that 20,000 persons died in London alone. In 1264, upwards of 500 Jews were massacred by the populace, who also destroyed their houses and synagogues. Under Edward I., the city was divided into twenty-four wards, an alderman being placed over each, and the great woodland of Middlesex was now disforested; but in this reign the houses were still built of wood, and roofed with straw or reeds. For the supply of water, there were twenty large leaden cisterns or conduits, which were placed under the charge of the lord mayor and aldermen, who, after visiting them on horseback, once every year, "hunted a hare before dinner, and a fox after it, in the fields near St. Giles's." King Edward III., by one of his charters, granted Southwark to the citizens. From 1348 to about 1357, London was ravaged by a fearful pestilence, so that it was necessary to grant several pieces of ground without the walls for burial-places. In 1380 a desperate insurrection took place, which would have been attended with the most serious consequences to the prosperity of the metropolis, had it not been for the courage of the lord mayor, Sir William Walworth, who killed Wat Tyler, who had placed himself at the head of it; together with the intrepidity of the young king, Richard II., who succeeded in pacifying the people, and restoring peace. Henry IV., who afterwards extended their privileges, was cordially welcomed by the citizens in 1399, after he had deposed Richard. It was in the reign of Henry V. that the city was first lighted at night by lanterns, slung across the street with wisps of rope or hay. In the reign of Henry VI., Jack Cade, having assumed the name of Mortimer, entered London at the head of a large body of insurgents, did much injury to the city, and beheaded Lord Say, the lord treasurer, and some other persons of importance; but on a general pardon being proclaimed, he was deserted by his followers, discovered and killed. In this reign the rent of houses in London increased from six and eightpence, to three pounds per annum. During the wars of the Roses, London was generally favourable to the House of York, and Edward IV., after the battle of Barnet, knighted the mayor, recorder, and twelve of the aldermen. This reign is celebrated for the introduction of printing into London by William Caxton, citizen and mercer, and brick was now first used in the construction of houses. Soon after Henry VII. ascended the throne, the "sweating sickness," a peculiar epidemic, raged in London with such violence, that two mayors and six aldermen, beside a great number of their fellow-citizens, died of it in one week. In this reign a field for archers was formed at Finsbury, which is now the Artillery-ground. The king and his two agents, Empson and Dudley, exacted large sums of money from London; but Henry VIII., who had formed a design of raising money without the assistance of parliament, was prevented from carrying it into effect by the resolute opposition of the citizens. Many improvements were at this time made in the city, and pavement was first laid down in the middle of the streets. The dissolution of the monasteries effected a great alteration in the appearance of the capital, from the number of religious foundations which it contained. The streets were still extremely narrow, with heavy signs projecting from all the houses; Erasmus tells us that the floors are commonly of clay, streued with rushes, which are occasionally renewed: but underneath lies unmoleted an ancient collection of beer, grease, fragments of fish, &c., and everything that is nasty. The Emperor Charles V. visited Henry, and was magnificently received here by the citizens. The Bible was first printed in 1542, but terrible persecutions on account of religion also took place in this reign, from which London suffered very severely. The reign of Edward VI. was remarkable, as far as relates to London, for the foundation of several charities; and in the seventh year of this reign, an act was passed for the regulation of taverns and public-houses, by which it was decreed that there should be only forty in the city and liberties of London, and three in Westminster. The dreadful religious persecutions which took place during the reign of Mary are too well known to be further alluded to, and it may but suffice to say, that Smithfield became a continual Aceldama. During the reign of Elizabeth, the metropolis increased in size, prosperity, opulence, and population. The queen and her advisers looked with such dread on the increase of buildings and population, that, by a decree of 1580, it was forbidden to erect new buildings where none had before existed in the memory of man. The lord treasurer was of opinion, that the growth of the metropolis encouraged the increase of the plague, created a trouble in governing such multitudes, a dearth of victuals, multiplying of beggars, and inability to relieve them; an increase of artisans more than could live together, impoverishing other cities for lack of inhabitants. It made lack of air, lack of room to walk, to shoot, &c.; and increase of people to rob the queen's customs. At this period the houses were mostly of wood, with one story projecting over the other. From Newgate Street, Cheapside, and Cornhill, to the banks of the Thames, was the most populous part of the city. From Lothbury to Bishopgate, and from Bishopgate to the Tower, there were only a few scattered houses, with the exception of Coleman Street. Goodman's Fields were pasture grounds, and there were not many buildings east of the Tower. Whitechapel was merely lined by a few houses, and Houndsditch was a street which ran into the fields. From Bishopgate to Moorfields and Finsbury, there were no buildings; Chiswell Street and Whitecross Street were hardly connected. Clerkenwell contained very few buildings besides the monastery and the church. There was a street from Holborn Bridge to Red Lion Street, beyond which was an open road to the village of St. Giles, having a few houses on the right hand. Oxford Road had trees and hedges on both sides, and from thence to Piccadilly was a road which passed through Hedge Lane and the Haymarket to St. James's hospital, now the palace, there being no houses on either side of it. Leicester Square was open fields, and there were very few buildings above St. Martin's Church. The Convent Garden extended as a garden to Drury Lane. The Strand consisted entirely of noblemen's mansions, the sites of which are still pointed out by the names of the streets. Spring Gardens extended to the present Treasury, where the cock-pit and tilt-yard then stood. There were streets from King Street to the Abbey, and several houses about Abingdon Street. On the opposite side of the river there were a few unconnected houses from Lambeth Palace to the banks of the river, opposite Whitefriars, where there was a line of houses continued to Winchester Street, in Southwark. Opposite Queenhithe were the circular buildings for bull and bear baitings. Southwark did not extend to the end of the High Street. Along Tooley Street to Horsleydown were several houses, but London Bridge was covered with buildings. Numbers of emigrants being driven to England from the Continent, came to London; and the houses of the lower orders were crowded to a frightful extent, producing disease and pestilence, so that, in 1603, as many as 30,000 persons died of the plague in London. In vain were restrictions put upon building; the suburbs of London increased rapidly, and have gone on doing so to the present time. Commerce, at that time, flourished in the metropolis. The citizens raised and paid for 10,000 men, and supplied 16 ships with their equipments, to aid Elizabeth against the Spanish Armada. In 1609, the Irish province of Ulster having become the property of the crown, James presented it to the city, on condition that they should establish an English colony there. They did so, and within seven years the towns of Londonderry and Coleraine were erected. In this reign, London was first paved with flag stones, and Sir Hugh Middleton directed the course of the New River from Ware to London. In the beginning of the reign of Charles I., the plague again returned to London, destroying 35,000 persons. The High Commission and the Star Chamber being situated in London, the citizens more particularly felt their evil effects, and of course sided with the parliament in the ensuing civil war. During the Commonwealth London still continued to increase, notwithstanding another proclamation intended to prevent it. In 1665, London suffered fearfully from the Great Plague, which commenced in December, 1664, and did not entirely cease till the January of the following year. Whole streets of families were swept away. Law proceedings were entirely suspended, the inns of court were closed, and such was the state of public business in the city, that grass grew in the Royal Exchange, and in the principal streets. The whole number of deaths, as given in the bills during that year, was 97,306, and that is supposed to fall short of the actual number, as a large proportion of the deaths could not have been regularly recorded. On the morning of Sunday, September 2, 1666, the Great Fire broke out in the heart of the metropolis, raged for four days and nights, and destroyed almost five-sixths of the city within the walls, and cleared a large area without the walls. The houses being chiefly built of wood, and the conflagration being impelled by strong winds, scarcely a building within range of the flames escaped, and the space of ground cleared by the fire was equal to an oblong of upwards of a mile long, and half a mile broad. It was estimated that property was destroyed to the amount of about £10,000,000. This fire, however, proved a great blessing to the metropolis, for the city was rebuilt within three or four years, in a style of much greater convenience, healthfulness, and regularity than before. In the reign of Charles II., and in that of James, his successor, many of the noblemen's mansions in the Strand made way for those shops and houses it now contains; and one year before the abdication of the latter monarch, Long-acre, Seven-dials, Soho, and Spitalfields, were built and colonized by upwards of 13,000 French protestants, who came to England in consequence of the revocation of the edict of Nantes. London played a prominent part in the revolution of 1688-9, and her citizens were the foremost to invite and to support the Prince of Orange, and to facilitate the great and beneficial change which then took place in the government of the country. William re-established the whole of the ancient rights of the city of London, which had been taken from them in former reigns. In 1692, when William was in Holland, £200,000 was borrowed from the city by his queen, Mary. In 1697, the privilege of sanctuary, then existing in various parts of the metropolis, which, of course, became places of refuge for vice and dishonesty, was suppressed, with the exception of that in the Mint, which lasted till the reign of George I. In 1703, during the reign of Anne, property to the amount of £2,000,000 was destroyed in London alone by a dreadful storm of wind. In 1711 an act was passed for the building of fifty new places of worship in the metropolis, the expense to be defrayed by a small duty on coals brought into the port of London. Glass globular lamps were introduced at this period. Parish engines were established, St. Paul's cathedral was completed, and the metropolis greatly enlarged and improved. During the reign of George II., Fleet ditch was arched over, and new and handsome roads replaced mean and dirty streets in many parts of the city. During the reign of George III. the paving was improved, and names were placed at the corners of the streets. A dangerous insurrection broke out in 1780, on the occasion of a petition to parliament from the Protestant Association. The populace burnt the prisons of Newgate, the King's Bench, and the Fleet, and liberated the prisoners; they also set fire to the places of worship, and several of the dwellings, of the Roman Catholics. The military then interfered, several of the rioters were killed, and some of them were tried, convicted, and executed. Lord George Gordon was subsequently tried for having at first collected the assemblage in St. George's Fields, but was acquitted. In 1814, London was visited by the allied sovereigns, who were entertained with the greatest magnificence by the lord mayor and corporation at the Guildhall. In 1834 the houses of parliament were burnt down; and in 1838 the Royal Exchange was burnt down. During the last few years the metropolis has wonderfully increased in size, and new roads, streets, and squares, are still continually rising up in every direction. Several villages, which not long ago were at some distance from London, are now joined to it; and among them may be mentioned those of Paddington, Kensington, Camberwell, Bow, Islington, Hampstead, and Highgate. Such is a brief summary of the history of this great metropolis.

NATURAL DIVISION OF LONDON.

London may be divided into five principal portions—the West End, the City, the East End, Westminster, and the Borough. The West End consists chiefly of handsome squares and streets, containing town residences of the aristocracy, and streets containing the handsomest and most fashionable shops. The City, which is the most ancient part of the metropolis, contains the offices of merchants and bankers, and of those connected with commerce, together with numbers of warehouses and shops. The East End of the town is filled with shops of every description, and numbers of the inhabitants are connected with the various branches of manufactures, and ship-building. Southwark and Lambeth, and the whole of the southern bank of the Thames, abound with innumerable manufactories of all descriptions, iron-foundries, glass-houses, soap-boiling and dye houses, shot and hat manufactories, breweries, &c.; the workmen belonging to them chiefly reside in the vicinity. But there are here also several handsome squares and streets, particularly St. George's Fields; and there are also numerous small and unhealthy courts and alleys, tenanted by the families of the poor, which, from their damp situation, and, generally speaking, filthy condition, give rise to and encourage the spread of all kinds of pestilential disease. Westminster contains the parks, the palaces, the houses of parliament, the abbey, the law courts, and the government offices. To the north of the metropolis an entirely new town has sprung up, called Camden or Kentish Town, containing several fine squares and streets, &c. There are two principal thoroughfares or ranges of streets in London, one at the north, and the other at the south, nearer the river. The former commences at Bayswater, and passes through Oxford Street, which is 1,920 yards in length, New Oxford Street, Holborn, Skinner Street, Newgate Street, Cheapside, Cornhill, Leadenhall Street, and Whitechapel to Mile-end, forming a continued broad and handsome thoroughfare of about eight miles in length. The southern range of streets commences at Westminster Abbey and the Houses of Parliament, passes along Parliament Street and Whitehall, the Strand and Fleet Street, which, together, extend for 1,909 yards, up Ludgate Hill to St. Paul's, where it joins the former thoroughfare at Cheapside, or, keeping a southern course, passes through Watling Street, Canon Street, and East Cheap, to the Tower. The most beautiful street in London is Regent Street, which intersects Oxford Street, and passes in a southerly direction to Pall Mall and Charing Cross. Other great thoroughfares intersect and unite these in every direction. Each of these immense thoroughfares, it should be remembered, is several miles in length, lined with dwellings of the most valuable description, embellished with magnificent shops and warehouses, filled to repletion with the most costly articles of merchandise, being at intervals, sometimes frequently, adorned with public buildings of the noblest character. Most of the other streets would be considered remarkable in most of the other capitals of Europe. London now contains upwards of 100 squares, and 10,600 streets, lanes, rows, &c.; the houses in which are not far short of 250,000. All the streets are well and regularly paved, and have a footpath laid with flags, with a regular curb-stone, raised some inches above the carriage-way. The modern streets are all of them wide, and extremely commodious. London is supplied with water by several extensive joint-stock companies, but the subject of water supply is at present under the consideration of the government. The drainage of the metropolis is also the subject of much discussion; and from the plans which have been proposed, it appears probable that it will be greatly improved, and rendered much more efficient than it has hitherto been. The streets and shops are well lighted with gas by various companies.

ECCLIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

London was, in ancient times, an archbishopric, and had a jurisdiction extending over the greater part of England; but, in 604, it was constituted a bishopric, Melitus, the abbot of a monastery at Rome, being the first bishop. The diocese comprises the archdeaconries of London, Middlesex, Colchester, Essex, and St. Alban's, and contains about 640 benefices, inclusive of sinecure rectories, but exclusive of benefices annexed to other preferments: the average gross income of incumbents is about £418: the total amount of the average gross yearly income of the see is about £15,130: net yearly income, £13,930. By an order in council, of June, 1837, the ecclesiastical commissioners were empowered to fix the average income of the bishop at £10,000 per annum; at the next avoidance of the see, or by consent of the bishop, this is the sum fixed for the payment of the new diocesan of London. The average yearly income of the dean and chapter of the cathedral is £11,150; net yearly income about £9,000. There are other dignitaries of the church—wardens, canons, prebendaries, &c.—who have separate revenues. The dean and chapter have houses to reside in.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

St. Paul's Cathedral is situated upon the summit of Ludgate Hill, and the site of St. Paul's Churchyard is supposed to be the oldest ground built upon in London. It is probable that it was anciently a burial-ground of the Britons, and afterwards of the Saxons, for Sir Christopher Wren, when digging for a foundation to the present edifice, discovered several wooden pins with which the Britons fastened their winding-sheets, and also several of the Saxon stone graves. Beside these, there were indications of a Christian church having been built here in the time of the Romans, although Sir Christopher completely disproves the assertion made by some authorities, that there was a temple to Diana. The first church is supposed to have been destroyed during the Dioclesian persecution, but was soon rebuilt. It was again destroyed by the Saxons, and again restored, according to Bede, by King Ethelbert, about the year 610. It was burnt down in the reign of William the Conqueror, in 1086, when Mauritius, then bishop of London, began to re-erect it in a style of great magnificence. Additions continued to be made to the structure until the year 1315. This cathedral, which was principally in the Gothic style of architecture, with a very lofty spire, was afterwards added to, and altered in various ways, but was almost entirely destroyed by the great fire in 1666. The celebrated Paul's Cross stood on the north side of the church, and it was here that the citizens assembled, in former times, in general convention, for the election of magistrates, and for public deliberation. A pulpit was afterwards attached to it, in which sermons were preached, and proclamations, &c., were also made from it. Stow describes it as a pulpit cross of timber, mounted upon steps of stone, and covered with lead. Pennant tells us, that before this cross, in 1483, was brought, divested of all splendour, Jane Shore, the charitable, the merry concubine of Edward the Fourth, and, after his death, the favourite of Lord Hastings. It was totally destroyed during the civil wars of Charles I. A house for the bishop once stood on the spot now occupied by London House Yard. Underneath the cathedral was the subterranean church of St. Faith, which, says Brayley, was originally a distinct building, standing near the east end of St. Paul's; but when the old cathedral was enlarged, between the years 1256 and 1312, it was taken down, and an extensive part of the vaults was appropriated to the use of the parishioners of St. Faith, in lieu of the demolished fabric. After the great fire, an ineffectual attempt was made to restore the old cathedral; but as this was found impossible, Sir Christopher Wren was intrusted with the designing and the erection of an entirely new edifice, for which he received the trifling pittance of £200 a year. The erection of the building cost altogether one million and a half. The first stone was laid on the 21st June, 1675, and the last was laid at the top of the lantern in 1710: thus the erection of this magnificent and noble edifice occupied thirty-five years. It is a cruciform structure of Portland stone, built after the model of St. Peter's at Rome, to which, in some respects, it is superior. The façade on the west, towards Ludgate Hill, is noble in the extreme. A cast-iron balustrade, standing on a dwarf stone wall, and weighing about 200 tons, surrounds the cathedral, and separates the churchyard from the street, which it has recently been proposed to remove, and to throw open the area, but the proposition is for the present negatived. A marble statue of Queen Anne, holding the insignia of royalty, and with the allegorical figures of Great Britain, Ireland, France, and America, stands within the enclosure opposite the west front. The interior of the cathedral is 500 feet in length from east to west; it is paved with square slabs of marble, alternately black and white, the floor of the altar being interspersed with porphyry. Within the south-west pier there is a circular staircase to the Whispering Gallery, which encircles the edge of the cornice of the lower part of the dome. A splendid view is here obtained of the church, the cupola, and the lantern, and particularly of Sir James Thornhill's fine paintings on the compartments of the dome, illustrating the most prominent events in the life of St. Paul. The name of the Whispering Gallery is derived from the celebrated reverberation of sounds obtained in it, the softest whisper being loudly and clearly heard at a distance of 100 feet, which is the diameter of the dome at this part. The same staircase leads to the galleries above the north and south aisles of the nave, which contain the library and model-room. Bishop Compton, whose portrait is seen here, gave a collection of books to this library; but the principal curiosity is the flooring, which consists of 2,000 pieces of oak. A room in the north gallery contains a beautiful model of the altar-piece that was intended for the east end of the church, and a large model for this building in the Grecian style. There are also some of the funeral decorations used at the interment of Lord Nelson. The clockworks are extremely curious: the pendulum is 14 feet in length, and has 1 cwt. at the end; the minute-hands on the exterior dials are 8 feet long, and weigh 75 pounds each; the hour-hands are 5 feet 5 inches long, and weigh 44 pounds each. The bell is 10 feet in diameter, and weighs 4½ tons; it can easily be distinguished from any other in the metropolis from the peculiar fineness of its tones, and has been heard at a distance of twenty miles; it is tolled on the death of any member of the royal family, of the lord mayor, bishop of London, or dean of the cathedral. The ball and cross were re-erected in 1822, and the whole of the copperwork, which weighs about 4 tons, is 27 feet in height; it will contain eight persons. The cathedral contained no monuments till the year 1790, when it was suggested that the appearance of the interior of the edifice would be improved by the introduction of monuments and statues to the memory of the illustrious dead. The first erected was to the memory of the philanthropist, John Howard. The monument to Lord Nelson was the work of Flaxman. Lord Nelson's remains are interred in a vault beneath the central part of the cathedral; his body was buried with great pomp and magnificence on the 9th January, 1806. Among other monuments to illustrious persons erected in this cathedral, may be mentioned those to Sir W. Jones, by Bacon, jun.; Earl Howe, and Sir Joshua Reynolds, by Flaxman: Sir John Moore, Lord Collingwood, Sir Ralph Abercromby, Lord Duncan, and Sir Isaac Brock, by Westmacott; General Dundas, General Ponsonby, General Pitton, Lord St. Vincent, Marquis Cornwallis, Lord Heathfield, Dr. Johnson (with an inscription by Dr. Parr), Middleton, Bishop of Calcutta, Bishop Heber, Dr. Babington, General Gillespie, &c. Above the entrance to the choir is a marble slab, with a Latin epitaph to Sir Christopher Wren, by his son; it is as follows:

"Subtus conditur
Hujus ecclesie et urbis conditor,
Ch. Wren;
Qui vixit annos ultra nonaginta,
Non sibi sed bene publico.
Lector, si monumentum requiris, Circumspice."

The vaults beneath the church contain the bodies of Sir Christopher Wren, Sir Joshua Reynolds, B. West, Esq., and Sir Thomas Lawrence; James Barry, John Opie, Henry Fuseli, and John Rennie, Esqrs., besides other eminent persons. In the centre avenue of the crypt, beneath the cathedral, under the centre of the dome, stands the tomb of Nelson; it consists of a sarcophagus of black and white marble, supported by a pedestal with the inscription: HORATIO VISC. NELSON. The sarcophagus and pedestal were removed here from Windsor, from the tomb-house of Cardinal Wolsey, who had prepared them for himself. The celebrated figure of Dr. Donne is also deposited here; it represents him as a corpse, and was executed by his own order in his lifetime. This grand and noble building occupies a piece of ground, 2 acres, 16 perches, and 70 feet in extent; its height from the vaults to the summit of the cross is 404 feet, and from the centre of the floor to the summit of the cross is 340 feet; exclusive of the dome, it is 110 feet in height; it is 2,292 feet in circumference; its breadth from north to south, through the transept, is 285 feet, and the breadth of the nave and the choir is 100 feet.

The place of worship which stands next to St. Paul's in point of importance, celebrity, and grandeur, is Westminster Abbey, which is dedicated to the apostle Peter. There are various wonderful stories told by monkish writers concerning the foundation of this edifice on Thorney Island, but Sir Christopher Wren, who was appointed to survey it, could discover nothing in proof of its ever having been a pagan temple. According to most authorities it was commenced in the sixth century, and Sebert is supposed to have completed that portion of it which at present forms the east angle. It afterwards suffered severely, in common with all other religious edifices, from the frequent incursions of the barbarians; but in the reign of Edward the Confessor, the old ruins were cleared away, and a magnificent cruciform structure was erected; all the former endowments were confirmed by that prince, and the privileges of the priesthood greatly extended. Henry III. enlarged the abbey, and added a chapel dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; and Henry VII., in 1502, commenced the erection of the beautiful structure attached, which is known by his name. From this time till the accession of William III. the abbey became neglected, and was much injured during the parliamentary war. In that reign, however, parliament voted a large sum for the beautifying and repairing it, the charge of doing which was intrusted to Sir Christopher Wren, who well and ably performed his task, and added the two towers at the western entrance. The abbey measures 416 feet from east to west, exclusive of Henry VII.'s Chapel; the height of the west towers is 225 feet. The splendid Gothic portico leading to the north cross has been sur-named the Beautiful, or Solomon's Gate; it is adorned by a handsome window. The appearance of the interior is strikingly grand and impressive. There is a curious mosaic pavement in front of the altar, said to have been executed by Richard de Ware, abbot of Westminster. The south of the choir contains the curious ancient monuments to Sebert, founder of the abbey, and Anne of Cleves; and the north, those to Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, his Countess, and Edmund Crouchback, Earl of Lancaster. At the back of the altar, to the east of the choir, stands Edward the Confessor's Chapel, containing the shrine of St. Edward, a most exquisite piece of workmanship, executed by Pietro Cavallini, in the reign of Henry III.; the tomb of Edith, the queen of Edward; that of Henry III., Edward I., &c. The iron sword of Edward I., part of his shield, the helmet and shield of Henry V., may also be seen here, together with the coronation chairs; the most ancient of which was brought from Scone, in Scotland, by Edward I., in 1297, with the rest of the regalia of that country. Beneath the seat of it is the stone said to have been Jacob's pillow. The other was made expressly for Mary, William III.'s consort. There is here a curiously ornamented screen, and a defaced brass figure of John de Waltham, bishop of Salisbury in 1383. To the east of the abbey is situated Henry VII.'s Chapel, which was commenced in 1502, the first stone having been laid by John Islip, abbot of Westminster, in presence of the king. It was completed in about ten years, at an expense of £14,000; it was entirely repaired by the parliament, between 1809 and 1823, at an expense of £42,000. This chapel was erected by Henry as a sepulchre for himself and his successors; and he ordered in his will that none but those of the blood-royal should be interred here: thus none have been hitherto admitted who were not closely allied to royalty. The north aisle contains the monuments of Queen Elizabeth, her sister Mary, the murdered princes, Edward V. and his brother Richard, and others of the blood-

royal. The south aisle contains the monuments of Mary Queen of Scots, Catherine Lady Walpole, Margaret Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII., George and Christopher Monk, first and second Dukes of Albemarle. There is also a monument with an effigy to the memory of Margaret Douglas, who died March 10, 1577, and who was nearly related, as the inscription informs us, to four kings of England and two of Scotland, and to five queens of Scots and two queens of England. In the royal vault are interred Charles II., William III. and his consort Mary, Queen Anne, and Prince George. All the monuments in this chapel are beautifully executed, but the principal one is that of Henry VII. and his queen Elizabeth. In the nave of the chapel is performed the ceremony of the instalment of the knights of the most honourable Order of the Bath, which was revived in 1725 by George I. George II. erected a fine vault under Henry VII.'s Chapel as the burying-place of the royal family. To the east of the abbey there is a small entrance leading to Poet's Corner, so called from the number of monuments there erected to celebrated British poets. Suffice it to mention William Shakspeare, Richard Brinsley Sheridan (whose monument consists merely of a black marble slab), Ben Jonson, Chaucer, Spenser, Milton, Mason, Gray, Prior, Granville Sharp, Mrs. Pritchard, Thomson, Mrs. Rowe, Gay, and Oliver Goldsmith; above the entrance to the chapel of St. Blaize—Handel, Chambers, Addison, Dr. Hales, Sir J. Pringle, Sir R. Taylor, Wyatt, Grubius, Casaubon, Garrick, Dryden, Cowley, Davenant, Camden, Congreve, Gifford, &c., &c. A minute detail of the various beautiful monuments in other parts of the abbey would be impossible. This fine old abbey is 383 feet long between the walls; 203 feet broad at the transept; the nave is 166 feet long, 39 broad, and 102 feet high; the choir is 156 feet long, and 28 broad; each of the aisles are 17 feet in breadth. Several of the ancient appurtenances of the abbey still exist adjoining the church. The cloisters contain several monuments; they are quadrangular, and have piazzas towards the court, in which are the houses of some of the prebendaries. The Chapter-house was erected in 1250, and is entered on one side of the cloisters through a beautifully carved Gothic portal. The Commons of Great Britain held their parliaments in this place, with the consent of the abbot, from 1377 to 1547, when Edward VI. granted them the chapel of St. Stephen. It is now filled with the public records, among which is the celebrated Doomsday-book. There is a curious crypt beneath the chapter-house, the walls of which are 18 feet thick, and the roof is supported by a hollow short round pillar, from which diverge several massy ribs. The Jerusalem Chamber, erected by Lillington as a part of the abbot's residence, is the place in which Henry IV. expired; he fell into a swoon while praying before St. Edward's shrine, and was carried to this chamber, when asking where he was, on being told, he answered, to use the words put into his mouth by Shakspeare:

"Laud be to God!—even here my life must end.
It hath been prophesied to me many years
I should not die but in Jerusalem,
Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land."

Near the abbey was the sanctuary, a place in which in ancient times certain criminals were sheltered; it had a church belonging to it, and was probably erected by the Confessor. Edward V. was born here. The Eleemosynary, or Almonry, where the alms of the abbey were distributed, was situated to the west of the sanctuary; this is celebrated as the place where the first printing press used in England was erected, in 1474. William Caxton, under the patronage of the abbot, Thomas Milling, then produced the first book ever printed in this kingdom, entitled, The Game and Play of the Chess. There is divine service every day in the abbey, at ten in the morning, and at three in the afternoon. On the north side of the abbey stands St. Margaret's church, which unfortunately intercepts the view of the cathedral, and of Henry VII.'s chapel: it was erected by Edward the Confessor, was rebuilt in the reign of Edward I., and has since been frequently repaired. There is a handsome basso relievo above the altar table, representing our Saviour and the disciples at Emmaus. The splendid window was intended as a present, from the magistrates of Dort in Holland, to Henry VII., but on the death of that monarch it was set up in Waltham Abbey; after the dissolution of that monastery it passed through various hands, amongst others, those of the celebrated General Monk, and in 1758 it was sold by Mr. Conyers of Copt Hall to the inhabitants of St. Margaret's, for 400 guineas; it is a representation of the crucifixion. The church is 130 feet long, 65 broad, and 45 high, and has ten excellent bells. At the end of one of the side aisles, there is a tablet with this inscription: Within the walls of this church was deposited the body of the great Sir Walter Raleigh, Knt., on the day he was beheaded in Old Palace Yard, Westminster, October 18, Ann. Dom. 1618:—

"Reader, should you reflect on his errors,
Remember his many virtues,
And that he was a mortal."

Returning to St. Paul's cathedral, as the most central portion of the metropolis, to the north of the churchyard we find Paternoster Row, so called from having been the place where the makers of paternosters or rosaries formerly resided; it is now almost entirely occupied by publishers and booksellers. In Pannier Alley, between this and Newgate Street, is a piece of sculpture, representing a boy on a pannier, with this inscription beneath it:

"When ye have sought
The city round,
Yet still this is
The highest ground.
Avgvst the 27,
1668."

Near St. Paul's, on the north-west, is St. Martin's le Grand, in which stands the General Post Office, a fine handsome building of the Grecian Ionic order, which was commenced in 1825, from designs by R. Smirke, Esq., and completed in 1829. The entire building is of brick, faced with Portland stone, except the basement, which is of granite; it is 400 feet in length, and 80 in depth, and has a portico 70 feet in breadth, and 20 in depth. In the centre of the edifice is the vestibule or great hall, used as a public thoroughfare.

Almost opposite the Post Office is the Money Order Office, a handsome and commodious building, in which business is carried on precisely as in a banking-house, for the receipt and transmission of small sums of money through the medium of the Post Office. In King Street, leading from Cheapside, in an easterly direction from the Post Office, stands the Guildhall, which was erected in 1411, but entirely burnt down by the Great Fire, with the exception of the interior of the porch and the walls of the hall. The front, erected in 1789, is Gothic, and has three divisions, with fluted pilasters between them. The fine stone hall is 153 feet long, 48 broad, and 55 feet high, and can contain from 6,000 to 7,000 persons; it is used for the city banquets, election of members of parliament and city officers, &c. This room contains monuments erected to the memory of Lord Nelson, and the two celebrated statesmen, Wm. Pitt and the Earl of Chatham; Beckford, lord mayor in 1763 and 1770: besides statues of Edward VI., Elizabeth, and Charles I. There is a flight of steps opposite the entrance to the hall, leading to the Chamberlain's Office; the Common Council Chamber, a handsome room, adorned with several fine paintings and pieces of sculpture; and the Court of Aldermen. The City Library, which adjoins the Guildhall, has a valuable collection of books; and next to it is the City Museum. To the right of the Guildhall, in King Street, are the Courts of Law for the city, which are ornamented with several portraits of the judges. On the opposite side of the road is the Justice Hall, where one of the aldermen sits daily. Opposite King Street, in Cheapside, is the church of St. Mary-le-Bow, which was erected in 1673 by Sir C. Wren, upon the site of a former one, erected in 1087, the crypt of which still remains; it derived its name from its having been erected on arches. The present edifice has a steeple 200 feet high. The bishops of London are consecrated here, and here are preached the eight lectures instituted by Dr. Boyle. Mercers' Hall, in Cheapside, has a highly ornamented façade, with figures of Faith, Hope, and Charity; it contains some curious memorials of the famous Whittington. Saddlers' Hall, a handsome edifice, also in Cheapside, was rebuilt in 1823. Grocers' Hall is situated in the Poultry, in a court of the same name; it is a fine building, with a stone façade, surrounded with emblematical sculptures, and contains some good portraits. The Chapel in the Poultry occupies the site of the old Compter-prison. At the eastern extremity of the Poultry, between that and Cornhill, is situated the Mansion-house, the official residence of the lord mayor, which was erected in 1739, from designs by Dance the elder. It is an extensive oblong edifice of Portland stone, with a wide and lofty portico, which has six fluted Corinthian pillars, and a flight of steps to the principal entrance; the pediment of the portico is ornamented with a piece of sculpture, designed by Sir R. Taylor, emblematic of the opulence and grandeur of the city. This building contains some spacious and splendid apartments, particularly the Egyptian Hall, the Ball Room, &c. Near the Mansion-house stands the Church of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, by many persons considered the masterpiece of Sir C.

Wren, who erected it after the destruction of the older one by the Fire of London: the structure is simple on the outside, but the interior is extremely beautiful; the dome, springing from the intersection, rests upon eight arches, supported by the same number of Corinthian columns; above the altar is a fine painting of the interment of St. Stephen, by West. It has just been restored according to the drawings of Sir C. Wren. Opposite the Mansion-house, in Threadneedle Street, stands the pile of buildings in which is carried on the business of the Bank of England. It was erected at different periods by different architects, but the principal portion of the present building is the work of Sir J. Soane, and has been erected since 1788; though low, it is singularly elegant in appearance, and is justly considered one of the best arranged places in the world for the transaction of business. The stream called Walbrook anciently flowed over part of the ground on which it stands, so that counter-arches were constructed beneath the walls. The buildings form an angular area, the exterior wall of which measures 365 feet on the front, or south side, 440 feet on the west side, 410 feet on the north side, and 245 feet on the east side. The principal rooms are the Rotunda, or circular apartment, which has a beautiful and elegant dome, 57 feet in diameter, and is chiefly used by stockholders; and the Drawing Office, which has recently been remodelled by Cockrel, and is perhaps the finest office in London. The clock is an ingenious piece of mechanism, indicating the time on sixteen different dials; it is wound up twice a week. Merchant Tailors' Hall, also in Threadneedle Street, is one of the largest in London, and contains some valuable portraits, together with the charter granted to the company by Henry VII. The South Sea House, which stands near it, is a handsome Doric structure, enclosing a quadrangle surmounted by a piazza, with Tuscan pillars; the apartments are convenient and elegant. On Cornhill, near the Bank, is the Royal Exchange, which was originally founded by Sir Thomas Gresham in 1566, and was totally destroyed by the Great Fire; it was rebuilt by Mr. Hawkesmoor in 1688, at a cost of £80,000, and was again burnt down in January, 1838. The present structure was then erected from designs by William Tite, Esq., F.R.S., the first stone having been laid by H. R. H. Prince Albert, on the 17th July, 1842, and the building was opened by Her Majesty Queen Victoria, on the 28th of October, 1844. It is by far the most magnificent structure for the purpose in the world, and looks more like the palace of a great monarch, than a place intended only for the meeting of merchants to transact the ordinary business of life. The western façade consists of perhaps the largest and most striking portico in existence, formed of six lofty composite pillars, surmounted by a pediment filled with an elaborately scattered group, emblematical of commercial pursuits and objects. The portico is approached by several steps, and in front of it there is an open paved area, on which is a fine equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington. There are kept here anemometers and other scientific instruments, for ascertaining the state and the force of the atmosphere. In this building is the suite of rooms appropriated to the Society of Lloyd's Underwriters, where the masters and owners of merchant vessels meet, and where so large a portion of the maritime business of the port of London is arranged. The north and south sides of the Exchange are also embellished with pilasters, the lower story being occupied as shops: the interior forms a quadrangle surrounded by a piazza, the arches of which support a series of apartments, and in the middle there is an area for the assemblage of the merchants, in the centre of which there is a statue of her present Majesty Queen Victoria. The Stock Exchange is situated opposite the east door of the Bank. No one is allowed to transact business here except regular stock-brokers, who must be balloted for annually by a committee, and, on being chosen, subscribe ten guineas each. The Auction Mart in Bartholomew Lane is a simple and elegant building, erected in 1808, from designs by Mr. John Walters, and contains a spacious saloon for sales of every description, and various apartments for auctions and auctioneers, &c. In Broad Street is situated the Excise Office, built in 1763, on the site of the almshouse and college founded by Sir Thomas Gresham; the business is now consolidated with the other branches of inland revenue, under a general title. Lombard Street, now chiefly occupied by bankers, derived its name from having been the residence of the Lombards, the money-lenders of former times; at No. 43, was the residence of Jane Shore, whose husband was a silversmith. In Canon Street is St. Swithin's Church, built by Sir C. Wren in 1680. In the south wall of it is the London Stone, which was looked upon as an antiquity in the time of William I. It was formerly much larger than at present, and was probably the place from which the Romans measured the distance of their stations. In Bishopsgate Street is the Church of St. Helen's, which is remarkable as being one of those that escaped the 'great fire.' It contains several curious monuments, among which may be mentioned those of Sir Thomas Gresham, the founder of the Royal Exchange; Sir Julius Caesar, Master of the Rolls to James I.; Sir William Pickering; Sir John Crosby; and Francis Bancroft, who left a large sum to the Drapers' Company for the foundation of almshouses, and whose remains are deposited in a chest, the lid of which is not fastened, and there is a square of glass over the face.

At the bottom of Fish Street Hill stands the Monument, which was erected by Sir Christopher Wren, by order of the parliament, to commemorate the Great Fire of London in 1666, and the rebuilding of the city. It was commenced in 1671, and finished in 1677, and, for proportion, is the finest modern column in the world. Its height from the pavement is 202 feet; the greatest diameter of the body of the column is 15 feet; the pedestal is 28 feet square, and 40 feet high. Over the capital there is an iron balcony, round a cippus or meta, 32 feet high, supporting a blazing urn. There are Latin inscriptions on the north and south sides of the pedestal, relating the circumstances under which the Monument was erected; and on the front or west side, there is a finely carved and curious emblematical piece of sculpture, representing the fire, and containing the figures of Charles II. and his brother James. The inscription on the base of the Monument, falsely attributing the origin of the fire to the Roman Catholics, was erased in 1840. The admission to the gallery of the Monument is sixpence. Several persons having committed suicide by throwing themselves from it, an overhead grating has been constructed to the gallery, so that a similar catastrophe cannot again occur.

In Leadenhall Street is the East India House, which contains the principal offices of the East India Company. It was founded in 1698, but as much altered and enlarged by Mr. Jupp. It has a grand façade, about 200 feet in length, with a noble portico in the centre. The library has a fine collection of Indian and Chinese manuscripts, and the museum is full of Indian curiosities.

In Mark Lane is situated the Corn Exchange, which consists of a quadrangular paved court, surrounded by a colonnade, containing stands for the corn-factors: the entrance is formed by eight Doric columns. Adjoining this building stands the New Corn Exchange, which was erected in 1828, from designs by Mr. Smith, at a cost of £90,000. It is in the Greek-Doric style of architecture, and has a façade, formed by a peristyle of six fluted columns, with rectangular wings and thin pilasters at the angles; the frieze is highly ornamented: the sale-room is a spacious, well-lighted hall, with circular glasses placed in the floor to light the underground premises, the roof being supported by twelve cast-iron pillars; it contains eighty-two stands for the factors. The subscription-room, where the daily papers are read, is an elegant saloon, ornamented with four scagliola columns and pilasters. A destructive fire, which broke out here in September, 1850, destroyed a large portion of this edifice, which, however, will probably soon be restored.

In Lower Thames Street is the Custom-house, which was erected in 1813, from designs by Mr. Laing; in 1825, however, the Long-room fell in, and the whole of the centre was taken down and rebuilt by Mr. Smirke. The principal front, towards the river, has three porticoes, the centre one projecting further than the others, and elevated on a sub-basement of five arches; it is surmounted by a balustrade, with a clock in the middle. The building is 480 feet long, and 100 broad; and has accommodation for about 650 clerks and officers, and 1000 tidewaiters and other officials. The first Custom-house in London was erected in 1559.

Near the Custom-house is the New Coal Exchange, a remarkably elegant and commodious structure, rising in a dome-like form, the interior being richly embellished with numerous remarkably beautiful fresco paintings. The floor under the dome is ornamented with a very beautiful piece of inlaid woodwork, of a star-like form. The Exchange was opened, in great state, in 1849, by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the great city functionaries, and the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and all the elevated officers of his own household, on which occasion the then lord mayor, Sir James Duke, was elevated to the dignity of a baronet. The structure is admirably arranged, and has been found a very useful, as well as a highly ornamental, addition to the public offices of London.

In a line with the Custom-house, in Lower Thames Street, stands Billingsgate Market, the celebrated daily market for fish: it is supplied by the fishing-smacks and boats that come up the river Thames from the sea, and also fresh fish, by land carriage, from all parts of England and Wales.

Beyond the Custom-house and Billingsgate Market, at the south-eastern extremity of the city, stands the Tower of London; it is built upon the north bank of the Thames, and from some coins that have been found here, it is supposed that the Romans had a fort upon this spot. The present edifice was erected by William I., at the commencement of his reign, and well garrisoned with Normans. It is governed by a constable, who has charge of the regalia. A wide and deep ditch runs northwards on either side of the fortress, meeting in a semicircle, the slope being faced with brick, with which material the walls have frequently been repaired. The circumference on the outside of the ditch is 3,156 feet, and a space of 12 acres 5 roods is enclosed by the walls. The Tower is separated from the Thames by a platform and part of the ditch. The western entrance, which is the principal one, consists of two gates outside the ditch, a stone bridge over it, and a gate within: great ceremony is used in opening the gates. On the south of the Tower is the Traitor's Gate, an arch through which prisoners were conveyed to the fortress by water; near it is the Bloody Tower, so called in the reign of Elizabeth, but from what cause is unknown. The royal apartments were on the south-east; for the Tower was sometimes the place of residence of the Sovereign, till the accession of Elizabeth. The church called St. Peter, in Vincula, was erected in the reign of Edward I., and in it are laid the bodies of several illustrious persons who suffered here, or on Tower Hill. The White Tower, or Citadel, was erected by Gundulph, Bishop of Rochester, in 1070, and is 116 feet long, 96 broad, and 92 feet high; the walls are 11 feet thick, and have a winding staircase; there are three lofty stories, with vaults beneath, and a reservoir for supplying the garrison with water at the top. This tower also contains the Chapel of St. John, formerly used by the English monarchs; it is now part of the Record Office. Sir Walter Raleigh is said to have been imprisoned in a vault beneath it, and to have written his "History of the World" there. The Office of Keeper of the Records contains all the rolls from the time of King John to the beginning of the reign of Richard III.; and under it is a powder magazine!!! The Wakefield Tower contains a handsome octagonal room, in which Henry VI. is said to have been murdered; the Lollards were also confined here. The Jewel Office is a dark strong stone room, in which the regalia are kept; here is also a collection of ancient plate. The Horse Armoury, a room 150 feet long and 33 wide, was built in 1825, and contains the suits of armour of various distinguished and celebrated personages, arranged in chronological order from the year 1272 to 1685, and also specimens of ordnance up to the time of Henry VI. In 1841 a fire took place at the Tower, which destroyed the Grand Storehouse and Small Armoury, containing above 20,000 stand of arms, besides committing other extensive ravages. Queen Elizabeth's, or the Spanish Armoury, was said to have been so called from its containing the spoils of the Spanish Armada. The Beauchamp or Cobham Tower is celebrated for the illustrious persons who have been imprisoned in it. The Bowyer Tower was where the Duke of Clarence was drowned in a butt of malmsey. The Lion's Tower, built by Edward IV., derived its name from the menagerie having formerly been kept there.

Near the Tower is an elegant edifice of Portland stone, used as the Trinity House. The Society of the Trinity was founded in 1515, by Sir Thos. Spelman, and is a corporation consisting of a master, four wardens, eight assistants, and eighteen elder brethren, mostly commanders in the navy or merchant service: their duty is to examine the children in Christ's Hospital, and the masters of King's ships, to appoint pilots for the Thames, to settle the rates of pilotage, erect lighthouses and sea-marks, to grant licenses to poor seamen not free of the city to row on the Thames, to hear and determine complaints of officers and men in the merchant service, and all business connected with the Thames. They derive their revenues from tonnage, light-dues, &c. Upon Tower Hill, also, stands the Mint, a handsome stone edifice.

At the eastern extremity of Wapping is the entrance to that stupendous monument of human ingenuity, the Thames Tunnel, which forms a communication, beneath the Thames, between Wapping and Rotherhithe. It was constructed under the direction of Mr. Brunel, the first stone of the descent for pedestrians, on the south side of the river, having been laid in March, 1825, by Mr. Smith, the chairman of the company. It is entered by a well-proportioned stone staircase; but there are also entrances for carriages, formed by circular descents of easy declivity, so that it is not necessary to lock the wheel of the heaviest laden waggon. The interior consists of two brick archways, which are paved or macadamized, and there are distinct footpaths for passengers; in the centre, and between the two arches, there is a line of spacious arches, each containing a gas-light. It is 1,300 feet in length, 35 feet in width, and 20 feet high.

Basinghall Street contains the Court of Bankruptcy, a plain quadrangular edifice of brick and stone, erected in 1820, from designs by Mr. Fowler: it contains fourteen public rooms, connected by commodious and spacious galleries.

St. John's Gate, leading to St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, is a splendid and well-preserved specimen of monastic building; it was anciently the gate to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, which stood here, and in more modern times is celebrated as the place of publication of the earlier numbers of the Gentleman's Magazine. It was the frequent resort of Garrick, Dr. Johnson, and other distinguished persons; it is now used partly as a tavern, and partly as a watch-house. At Clerkenwell Close formerly stood the house of Oliver Cromwell. On Clerkenwell Green stands the Sessions-house for the county of Middlesex, which was erected about 1780: it has a stone façade, with a rusticated basement, above which there are four Ionic pillars and two pilasters, supporting other ornaments. Above the centre window is placed a medallion of George III., and over two others those of Justice and Mercy, by Nollekens. The interior is divided into the court, the hall, and rooms for the magistrates, grand jury, &c. One of the rooms contains a portrait of Sir B. Hicks, the founder of the old hall, which stood in St. John's Street. Near Spa Fields is Clerkenwell Prison, a common jail for the county of Middlesex. There is a pump at No. 3 Ray Street, on which is an inscription, to the effect that it is furnished with water from a well about four feet to the east, round which the parish clerks of London assembled in ancient times to perform mysteries, or sacred plays; from this circumstance the parish of Clerkenwell derives its name. In Fore Street, Cripplegate, stands the church of St. Giles, erected about 1546. Above the south-east door there is a fine figure of Time. Oliver Cromwell was married in this church; and here are buried Fox the martyrologist, Speed the historian, and the great poet Milton, whose remains lie beneath the clerk's desk, near those of his father; the monument to his memory is by Bacon, and was erected at the expense of S. Whitbread, Esq.

DISTRICT TO THE WESTWARD OF ST. PAUL'S.

Having now taken a survey of the principal buildings and streets of the metropolis to the north and east of St. Paul's, we will commence a description of those towards the south and west of London. The neighbourhood of the cathedral still retains appellations denoting its former connection with the church, such as Creed Lane, Ave Maria Lane, Amen Corner, &c. Between Amen Corner and Ludgate Street, stands Stationers' Hall, which was erected on the site of a mansion anciently belonging to John, Duke of Bretagne and Earl of Richmond, and afterwards to the Earls of Pembroke and Abergavenny. It was finally possessed by the Company of Stationers, who rebuilt it of wood, but it was destroyed in the Great Fire, and replaced by the present edifice, which contains good portraits of Steele, Richardson, Prior, and Bishop Hoadley, &c. From Stationers' Hall formerly issued all the almanacks that were published.

In St. Paul's Churchyard stands St. Paul's School, a handsome edifice, erected in 1822, from designs by Mr. G. Smith. This institution was founded in 1509 by Dr. Colet, dean of St. Paul's cathedral, and was established for the free education of 153 boys, by a master, an usher, and a chaplain, but now by two upper and two under masters. The Mercers' Company are the trustees of the foundation. The revenue of the school altogether amounts to about £6,000. There are eight classes or forms, and those boys who have passed these are moved to the universities, where there are several exhibitions belonging to this school. On the south of St. Paul's is Doctors' Commons, where courts are held for the trial of civil and ecclesiastical causes, under the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London. There are also offices in which wills are deposited and searched. All those who practise in this court are advocates or proctors; the former are such as have taken the degree of doctor of civil law, and act as counsellors or pleaders. The Court of Arches and the Prerogative Court are held here, and also the Admiralty Court, the judge of which is preceded by an officer with a silver oar. The Prerogative-office is open from 9 to 3, and 1s. is the charge for searching for a will: the original wills of Milton and Shakspeare are deposited here.

HERALDS' COLLEGE.

To the east of Doctors' Commons is the Heralds' College; the members of this college are three kings-at-arms, six heralds-at-arms, and four pursuivants-at-arms, who attend the king on state occasions, make proclamations, &c.: the building contains a court of honour, a library, and apartments for the members.

WEST OF ST. PAUL'S.

To the west of St. Paul's is Ludgate Hill: the origin of the name is not known. A gate, which was rebuilt in 1586, formerly crossed the street by St. Martin's church, and was a place of refuge; or, according to some, a place of confinement for debtors: it was removed in 1760. No. 24 is the London Coffee House, in which there is a stone with a Latin inscription to the memory of Claudia, the wife of a Roman general, which was discovered in 1806. The Bell Savage is an inn of great antiquity; its name, according to Stow, was derived from one Isabella Savage, who gave this inn to the Cutlers' Company, but Addison says that it was taken from La Belle Sauvage, a beautiful woman who lived in a wilderness, described in an old French romance. Between Ludgate Hill and the Thames, anciently stood a monastery of the Black Friars, an order of Dominicans, in which parliaments were sometimes held, and which was frequently honoured by a visit from royalty; in a hall here, the cause was tried between Henry VIII. and Queen Katherine. Near this, perhaps on the site of the present Playhouse-yard, stood the Theatre in Blackfriars, where Shakspeare's, Ben Jonson's, and Beaumont and Fletcher's plays were performed. Printing-house Square, in the vicinity, is the site of the ancient king's printing-house, whence bibles, prayer-books, and proclamations were issued. In this square are the extensive premises occupied by the "Times" newspaper office. On the opposite side of the street is the ancient palace of Bridewell, now a house of correction: it was restored by Henry VIII., and granted by Edward VI. to be used as a house of correction, as was recorded in the following lines that hung under a portrait of that king in the chapel:—

"This Edward of fair memory the sixth,
In whom with greatness, goodness was commixt,
Gave this Bridewell, a Palace in old time,
For a chastising house of vagrant crime."

A building connected with this establishment formerly stood near Bethlehem hospital, but it has recently been removed to Norwood, in which nearly 200 boys and girls are instructed in mechanical employments. In Castle Street, which is nearer the river, anciently stood, on the banks of the Thames, a large building called Baynard's Castle, from the name of its first owner; it afterwards belonged to the Fitzwalters, one of whom, Baron Robert Fitzwalter, in the reign of John, headed the army of his brother barons, when they made those demands which led to the signing of Magna Charta. The castle was burnt down in 1428, but was restored by Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester; and it was here that Richard III. assumed the royal dignity, on the invitation of Buckingham. The building was entirely destroyed in the great fire of 1666, but the ward in which it stood still retains its name. Near London Bridge, on the banks of the Thames, also stands Fishmongers' Hall, a fine and handsome edifice, erected in 1833, from designs by Mr. Roberts, near the site of the old hall built by Sir C. Wren. The building contains a curious statue of Sir William Walworth, grasping the identical dagger with which Wat Tyler was stabbed.

LUDGATE HILL, &c.

About the centre of Ludgate Hill is the Old Bailey, leading to Newgate Street; it contains the sessions-house, in which a court is held for the trial of criminals eight times in the year, by the Queen's commission of oyer and terminer; and comprehends in its jurisdiction the county of Middlesex and the city of London: the judges are the lord mayor, those aldermen that have passed the chair, the recorder, the common sergeant, together with the judges of England, and both the sheriffs. The Central Criminal Court sessions are held once in six weeks, and the court has jurisdiction of the whole metropolis, and fifteen or twenty miles round. Adjoining this court is the prison of Newgate, which derives its name from the gate which once formed a portion of it. Persons of rank were imprisoned here as early as 1218, but it was afterwards rebuilt by the executors of Sir Richard Whittington: it was destroyed by the great fire. After that time it was twice rebuilt before 1780, in which year, during the riots, the whole of the interior was destroyed by fire; after which the building was reconstructed in its present form. The prison is divided into three stations: the first for convicts, the second for prisoners confined for crimes and misdemeanors, and the third for females. There is also a neat chapel, and a school for boys. The chaplain has a salary of £265 per annum.

Breakneck Stairs, in Green Arbour Court, which leads from the opposite side of the street, is one of the places where watermen plied for fare on the Fleet ditch; and it was in a house over these stairs, that Oliver Goldsmith wrote his "Vicar of Wakefield." Newgate Street contains several old houses, some of which have sculptures upon them, similar, no doubt, to those signs by which every shop in London was formerly known. At the corner of Warwick Lane is a stone figure of Guy, Earl of Warwick, whose house stood near this spot.

In Newgate Street stands Christ's Hospital, better known as the Blue-Coat School, in which there are generally from 1,000 to 1,200 boys and girls receiving their education, their boarding, and their clothing. It was founded by the good and pious Edward VI., on the suggestion of Dr. Ridley, bishop of London. The establishment at first consisted of a grammar-school for boys, and a separate school for girls. Charles II. founded and endowed a mathematical school, or ward, for forty boys, and another mathematical school was also founded by Mr. Travers. The lord mayor and corporation of London are directors of the institution. A donation of £400 constitutes a governor: the annual expenditure is about £30,000. The present building was erected from designs by Mr. Shaw. The Infirmary was completed in 1822, and in 1829 the New Hall was opened. It is a fine structure in the Tudor style, 187 feet long, 51½ wide, and 46½ high; the south façade is of stone, and has a statue of Edward VI. In the centre it is flanked by towers, between which are eight lofty windows. The interior contains several portraits of Charles II., Queen Anne, &c., also Holbein's picture of Edward VI. granting the charter to the hospital: the court-room has several fine portraits. On the front of the writing-school there is a statue of Sir John Moore, its founder. In the great hall it is customary for the lord mayor, aldermen, &c., to attend on St. Matthew's day to hear orations from the senior boys, many of whom have afterwards become eminent in their several positions in life. Among the celebrated persons buried in the cloisters of Christ's Hospital, may be mentioned John of Bourbon, who was made prisoner at the battle of Agincourt; Thomas Burdett; and Isabella, the wife of Edward II.

Christ Church, near the hospital, is a handsome building with a lofty square tower, erected in 1687 on the site of a church of Franciscans, where between 600 and 700 celebrated persons were interred; the front is of white marble, ornamented with basso relievos; the pulpit is finely carved. The nonconformist divine, Richard Baxter, is buried here. St. Sepulchre Church, in Skinner Street, is a fine stone building, erected by Sir C. Wren in 1670.

West Smithfield is the place where, during the Marian persecution, the martyrs suffered at the stake; the spot where the fires were generally kindled was a little eastward of the western gate of St. Bartholomew's hospital, and about fifty paces from the walls of that building. In more ancient times, Smithfield was frequently the scene of jousts and tournaments, when the knights and ladies rode here in procession from the Tower. It was here that the Lord Mayor Walworth killed Wat Tyler. It is now remarkable as the largest cattle market in England, though great efforts are at present being made to remove the market to Islington, in consequence of the inconvenience occasioned by driving large flocks of sheep and herds of cattle through the city.

On the south of the market stands St. Bartholomew's Hospital, which formerly belonged to the priory of St. Bartholomew in Smithfield, founded by Rahere, who was the first prior, in 1102. It was incorporated in the last year of the reign of Henry VIII., and has now a revenue of about £30,000 per annum. The hospital was rebuilt in 1729, and contains wards for the reception of patients, nearly 11,000 of whom are annually relieved here. The principal entrance, built in 1702, consists of a large arch, above which there is a statue of Henry VIII. The grand staircase was painted by Hogarth at his own expense. Within the precincts of the hospital is the Church of St. Bartholomew the Less, erected about 1420; it is a small but interesting structure.

Along Farringdon Street, and at the bottom of Ludgate Hill, formerly ran the Fleet ditch, which became such a nuisance that it was gradually closed in and built over. The Fleet prison, which was pulled down a short time ago, was founded in the beginning of the reign of Richard I., and was the place of confinement for those imprisoned by the Star Chamber. In the market before this prison, men plied in behalf of clergymen, inviting people to walk in and be married. To such an extent, says Malcolm, were the proceedings carried, that twenty and thirty couple were joined in one day, at from ten to twenty shillings each; and, between the 19th October, 1704, and the 12th February, 1705, 2,954 marriages were celebrated (by evidence), besides others known to have been omitted. The abuse at length became so great, that it was put an end to by Lord Hardwicke's marriage act. The Fleet ditch is thus spoken of by Pope in his 'Dunciad':—

"This labour past, by Bridewell all descend,
(As morning prayer and flagellation end,)
To where Fleet ditch, with disembodying streams,
Rolls the large tribute of dead dogs to Thames:
The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper sable blots the silver flood."

The obelisk at the east of Fleet Street denotes the extent of the Fleet ditch in 1775, when it was filled up, and the present Bridge Street was erected on its site. Opposite is the Waithman Testimonial, a granite obelisk, erected by subscription in 1833.

Fleet Street was for a long time the great place for shows and spectacles, and the famous ceremony of burning the pope took place here; on the left side of which is seen the handsome spire of St. Bride's Church. This edifice is allowed to be one of the finest productions of Sir C. Wren: the spire was originally 234 feet high, but having been damaged by lightning, it was much reduced: the interior of the building is one of the most beautiful in London. Bouverie Street leads to a spot once celebrated as Whitefriars, or Alsatia, which was originally a religious sanctuary, belonging to the Carmelite convent of Whitefriars, and which, from the reign of Elizabeth to that of William III., who suppressed it, was a sanctuary or place of refuge for debtors, and the habitation of the most abandoned and profligate persons in London. Sir Walter Scott, in his 'Fortunes of Nigel,' gives an admirable and life-like description of this place in the reign of James I.

Next to Whitefriars is the Temple, so called from having anciently been the dwelling-house of the knights-templars, whose order was dissolved in the reign of Edward II., when the house was purchased by the professors of common law, and converted into inns. It is divided into the Inner and Middle Temple, referring to Essex House, which stood on the other side of Temple Bar, and was called the Outer Temple, till it came into the possession of the Essex family. The principal entrance to the Temple is the Middle Temple gate, erected by Inigo Jones: it consists of a structure of brick, with four Ionic stone pilasters upon a rustic basement, carved with the figure of a lamb, the device of the society. The only part of the ancient buildings which now remains is St. Mary's, or the Temple Church, a Gothic stone building, erected in 1185, which contains the monuments of some knights crosslegged, showing that they had been crusaders in the Holy Land: those to the right are supposed to represent the Marshals, first, second, and third Earls of Pembroke, and another of them is that of Geoffrey de Magnaville, Earl of Essex, killed in Cambridgeshire in 1148. This church also contains the remains of the eminent lawyers, Plowden, Selden, and Thurlow. The entrance is formed by a beautiful Norman arch. The church was recased with stone, under the direction of Mr. Smirke, in 1828, and within these few years the interior has been renovated and most richly embellished, at an enormous expense, so that this is now one of the most beautiful ecclesiastical structures in this or any other country, and quite worthy of the great society for which it is the place of worship.

The institutions called the Inns of Court, were formerly places in which persons were brought up and educated for the bar, but the law students have now only to eat a certain number of dinners, during the terms of three or five years, in one of the inns of court, the expense amounting to about £150. The inns are governed by masters, principals, benchers, stewards, &c., and the members consist of benchers, outer barristers, inner barristers, and students; a treasurer is annually chosen from the benchers.

Sergeants' Inn, leading out of Chancery Lane, has been occupied by the sergeants-at-law since the days of Henry IV.: the present houses were erected in 1730. The office of the Amicable Annuitant Society stands on the site of the ancient hall and chapel. One of the customs formerly observed in the creation of sergeant, was for the learned gentleman to go in procession to St. Paul's, and there choose his pillar, as in ancient times the lawyers took their station at one of the pillars of the cathedral, and there waited for clients. Clifford's Inn, adjoining Sergeant's Inn, is so called from the noble family of De Clifford, who granted it to the students-at-law in the time of Edward III. The Rolls Court, in Chancery Lane, is ornamented with a statue of George I. The master of the rolls is keeper of the rolls or records of the acts of the courts of law; as a judge, he decides on cases of equity, and hears motions, &c. He has a handsome residence attached to the court, but the present master of the rolls, Lord Langdale, does not live in it. Adjoining it is the Rolls Chapel, in which a large number of the records or rolls of parchment are kept. It was originally the house of an eminent Jew, from whom it was taken by Henry III., and converted into a residence for converts from the Jewish religion; it was afterwards given by Edward III. to the Court of Chancery, to keep its records in.

In Fleet Street, near Chancery Lane, was the house of Isaac Walton, and on the other side of the corner of the lane resided Abraham Cowley. Shire Lane, adjoining Temple Bar, is celebrated as the place from which Isaac Bickerstaff, the name under which Richard Steele wrote the 'Tatler,' dated his papers: the celebrated Kit-Kat Club is said to have originated in this lane. Near Temple Bar, about the site of Child's banking-house, stood the celebrated Devil's Tavern, where Ben Jonson held his club: this is the one mentioned by Pope:—

"And each true Briton is to Ben so civil,
He swears the Muses met him at the Devil."

The Fire of London stopped at the Temple Exchange Coffee-house, a circumstance that is recorded on a stone in the front of it. At the western extremity of Fleet Street is Temple Bar, the only one of the city boundaries at present in existence; it was erected by Sir C. Wren, after the Great Fire, and is formed of Portland stone; it is of the Corinthian order, and has two posterns for foot passengers: there are stone statues of Elizabeth and James I. above the gateway, on the east side, and statues of Charles I. and II. over the west side. The heads of persons executed for high treason were formerly exhibited over this gate; and here, on state occasions, the lord mayor and the corporation receive the royal family, &c.

THE STRAND, &c.

On the west side of Temple Bar is the Strand, so named from its situation on the banks of the Thames. On the left is Essex Street, once celebrated as the residence of Elizabeth's favourite, the Earl of Essex, who inherited it from the other favourite, the Earl of Leicester: it was pulled down soon after the Restoration, and the present street and court were erected on its site. The church of St. Clement Danes stands in the open area in the middle of the Strand, and is said to have been erected on the site of one built here in 700. The present edifice, which is of stone, was built by Sir C. Wren in 1680, and a lofty steeple was erected by Gibbs in 1718. Otway was buried here in 1685, and Dr. Kitchiner in 1827. Clement's Inn, on the right, is so named from the church, and is entered through a gateway; the hall is a small Tuscan building, ornamented with several portraits, and the square is decorated with a handsome statue of a negro, holding a sun-dial. The following lines have been written in reference to this figure:—

"In vain, poor sable son of woe!
Thou seek'st the tender tear;
For thee in vain with pangs they flow,
For mercy dwells not here.
From cannibals thou fed'st in vain;
Lawyers less quarter give;
The first won't eat you till you're slain,
The last will do't alive."

This inn is of great antiquity, and Shakespeare makes his Justice Shallow a member of it. He must to the Inns of Court. I was of Clement's once myself, where they talk of Mad Shallow still. A pump now covers St. Clement's well, whose waters, says Fitzstephen, writing in the reign of Henry II., are sweet, salubrious, and clear, and whose rumble murmur o'er the shining stones. Holywell, Clerkenwell, and St. Clement's Well, he continues, are the most frequented, both by the scholars from the school (Westminster), and the youth from the city, when on a summer's evening they are disposed to take an airing. Matters in this respect are now a little changed.

The Church of St. Mary-le-Strand was erected by Gibbs in 1717, being one of the fifty ordered in the reign of Anne; the exterior is highly ornamented, and it has a lofty steeple. To the left is Somerset House, a noble edifice, erected in 1775, from designs by Sir William Chambers. It is built upon the site of a magnificent mansion, erected by Somerset the Protector, on whose execution it fell to the crown, and became the residence of the queens of James I., Charles I., and Charles II. Cromwell's body lay in state here, as afterwards did that of Monk. The present edifice is in the form of a quadrangle, occupying a space about 800 feet in width, and 500 in depth, having a large court in the centre. The front towards the river is very imposing, and consists of a spacious terrace, raised on rustic arches, adorned with a colossal mask of the Thames in alto relievo. This building contains several public offices, besides apartments for the meetings of the Royal Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Geological Society, and the Royal Astronomical Society: the University of London, incorporated by William IV., and the School of Design, instituted by government in 1837 for the education of industrial artists, and those who prepare patterns for manufacture, are also in this building. The east wing, completed in 1833, is appropriated to the purposes of the King's College, an admirable institution, designed to provide a good education, at a small cost, to youths in the metropolis and its vicinity. It is patronised by the dignitaries of the church and several of the nobility, and is under the control of a council of forty-one, of which the Bishop of London is president. Beyond Somerset House is Wellington Street, forming a handsome approach to Waterloo Bridge. Savoy Street leads to the site of the ancient Savoy palace, built in 1245 by Peter, Earl of Savoy, and the place of the confinement and death of John, King of France, in 1364; it was afterwards used as an hospital, and then as a prison for deserters, but was pulled down in 1816. The ancient Savoy church is still in existence; it is a Gothic structure, dedicated to John the Baptist; it has a remarkably fine carved roof, and was beautified and repaired in 1820; there are several ancient monuments in it, some of which are very magnificent: this was the burial-place of Anne Killigrew, rendered famous by the ode of Dryden, describing her as "A grace for beauty, and a muse for wit."

Exeter Hall, on the right of the Strand, was erected from designs by Mr. Gearing in 1830, for the meeting of religious, charitable, and scientific institutions. The principal room on the upper floor is 136 feet by 76, and will accommodate 2,500 persons. Musical festivals, oratorios, and concerts are frequently held here.

Hungerford Market derives its name from an ancient Wiltshire family, who had a mansion here in the days of Charles II. It is a handsome and commodious structure, erected in 1831, from designs by Mr. Fowler, and consists of three divisions: one of them in the form of a quadrangle, is 140 feet by 70, flanked by colonnades, and with houses and shops on either side; the centre hall is 188 feet by 23, and consists of four rows of granite columns, with arches, which support the roof, and on each side of the hall is a line of shops. The lower quadrangle was built for the fish market, but a fire having recently taken place here, greater accommodation was provided by the erection of shops and houses towards the river, and the fish market is now removed from the lower to the upper part of the market. This market forms a fine approach to the Hungerford Suspension Bridge.

Craven Street, to the right of Hungerford Market, was once the residence of Benjamin Franklin. On the north side of the Strand, opposite a part of the Adelphi, is the Lowther Arcade. Northumberland House, at the western extremity of the Strand, and opposite Trafalgar Square, is the only one now remaining of all the stately mansions of the nobility by which it was once surrounded. It was erected upon the site of the ancient hospital of St. Mary Roncesvaux, by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, in the reign of James I. The Earl of Suffolk inherited it, and called it Suffolk House; and in 1642, Algernon, Earl of Northumberland, having married the daughter of Lord Suffolk, became its owner, and gave it its present appellation. The front is surmounted by a lion, the device of the Percy family: the edifice has two wings more than 100 feet long, stretching from the garden front to the river; the principal door leads to a vestibule about 82 feet in length, and 12 in width, ornamented with Doric columns, and terminated at each end by a splendid marble staircase leading to the principal apartments, which are most splendidly fitted up, and contain numerous paintings by the best masters. There is a garden between the house and the river. It was at Northumberland House that Goldsmith, after studying some fine compliments for the Duke of Northumberland, delivered them to an elegantly dressed gentleman, whom he discovered to be the footman.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE, PALL MALL, &c.

Trafalgar Square is a noble area, 132 yards by 77, constructed in the reign of George IV., from the grounds of the Old King's Mews. On the northern side stands the National Gallery, next to which is St. Martin's Church; on the west is a range of handsome houses, and on the east the College of Physicians, and the Union Club. In the centre there are two fountains supplied with water from an Artesian well, which also supplies several public buildings in the neighbourhood, besides some baths and wash-houses that have lately been established there. The Nelson Column, to the west of the fountains, is a fine monument, the capital in imitation of that of the Mars Ultor at Rome. It is 162 feet in height, and surmounted by a statue of Nelson. The total elevation of this column is 193 feet; the statue is 17 feet high, and the pedestal on which it stands, 14 feet. On the four sides of the pedestal are beautifully-carved basso-relievi of Nelson's principal engagements. The entire cost was about £30,000. The southern portion of Trafalgar Square is formed by Charing Cross, so called from one of the crosses which Edward I. erected here to the memory of his queen, Eleanor, and from the village of Charing, as this spot was then called. Some however say that it was so called from a corruption of the French words Chère reine, dear queen. The cross was destroyed during the parliamentary war, and was replaced by a statue of Charles I., cast by Le Seur, in 1633, which was the first equestrian statue erected in Great Britain. The parliament sold it to John River, a brazier in Holborn, with orders to destroy it, but he concealed it till the Restoration, when it was replaced in its former position on a pedestal executed by Grinlin Gibbons. Hugh Peters was executed here in 1660.

The National Gallery, at the north of the square, has a façade of 460 feet in length, the depth of it being 56 feet. It contains a magnificent collection of pictures, which was commenced in 1824 by the purchase, on the part of the government, of most of the pictures belonging to the late Mr. Angerstein. It now comprises specimens of the works of the most celebrated painters, ancient and modern, that Europe has produced, and it is open to the public on the first four days of the week. The Royal Academy also occupy apartments in the same building, and there is here an annual exhibition of paintings which have never been before exhibited. The works of modern artists, and no copies of other paintings are admitted. The Incorporated Society of Artists and Royal Academy obtained their charter in 1765, but in consequence of disputes arising between the directors, the Royal Academy was instituted; Sir Joshua Reynolds, who was the first president, being knighted on the occasion, which took place in 1768. This society is intended for the encouragement of design, painting, sculpture, and other branches of the fine arts, and is under the direction of forty artists of the first rank. Sir Joshua Reynolds, Mr. West, Sir Thomas Lawrence, and Sir M. A. Shee, who is lately dead, were successively the presidents; the present president is Charles Eastlake, Esq.

The Church of St. Martin's in the Fields is a fine stone building, rebuilt by Gibbs in 1721, on the site of a church which had stood here in 1222. A noble portico of eight Corinthian columns, approached by a flight of steps, forms the west front. The church is 140 feet long by 60 broad, and 45 feet high; it has a fine arched roof, and a handsome steeple.

Pall Mall East, a triangular area adjoining Charing Cross, containing a handsome bronze equestrian statue of George III., by Mr. M. C. Wyatt.

The Haymarket, so called from the purpose to which it was formerly appropriated, contains the Queen's Theatre, or Italian Opera House, the most fashionable place of amusement in the metropolis: it was at first constructed by Sir John Vanbrugh, but was burnt down in 1790, and was soon afterwards rebuilt. The stage is 60 feet long, and 80 broad. Each box is enclosed with curtains, and there are five tiers, most of which are private property. The boxes will accommodate about 900 persons; the pit will contain 800, and the gallery 800. There is a grand concert-room attached to it, 95 feet long, 46 broad, and 35 high.

Opposite to this is the Haymarket Theatre, erected from designs by Mr. Nash, in 1821, on the site of the original building, which was erected in 1702.

Waterloo Place, leading to Regent Street, contains several handsome buildings, the chief of which is the Athenæum Club House; and at the end, leading into St. James's Park, to which there is a fine flight of steps, is the Duke of York's Column, which is constructed of pale red granite: it is 150 feet high, and surmounted by a colossal statue of the Duke in bronze, 14 feet high, executed by Westmacott. The gallery, which is ascended by a spiral staircase, commands a fine view of London.

Pall Mall contains several noble specimens of architecture occupied as club-houses, the principal of which are the Reform Club, the United Service Club, the Carlton Club, Travellers, &c., all of which are fitted up in the interior with the most luxurious magnificence. Marlborough House, in Pall Mall, was the residence of the late Queen Dowager, but is now devoted to the reception of the pictures composing the Vernon Gallery, until the Prince of Wales shall come of age, when it will become his residence. It is a handsome brick edifice, and was erected in the reign of Queen Anne for the Duke of Marlborough. At the western extremity of Pall Mall stands St. James's Palace, which is an irregular brick building, entered from St. James's Street by a gatehouse leading to a court and piazza, beyond which is the grand staircase. It was erected by Henry VIII. on the site of an hospital of the same name, and, since Whitehall was burnt down, has been a town residence of the British sovereigns. It is now only used for drawing-rooms, levees, and on other state occasions. The south-east wing was consumed in 1809, and has never been rebuilt. The state apartments look towards the park; they are approached by a passage and staircase of extreme simplicity, at the end of which is a gallery, or guard-room, used as a kind of armoury. Beyond this is a small chamber covered with tapestry; the next room is fitted up with the greatest splendour, the walls being covered with crimson damask, the curtains being of the same material. This room contains an immense looking-glass, a painting of George II. in his robes, and other pictures, together with a splendid or-molu lustre. The next room is also splendidly fitted up, containing pictures, mirrors, &c. The third and last room is that in which the Queen holds her drawing-rooms, and the decorations in it are most magnificent and gorgeous. The throne consists of rich crimson Genoa velvet, covered with gold lace; a canopy surmounts it, in the centre of which is a star embroidered in gold. There are three steps to ascend, on the summit of which is a chair of state, of exquisite workmanship. There are a few paintings, and the piers of the room are filled up with pier-glasses, the cornices being richly gilt. At the back of this apartment is Her Majesty's closet, in which she gives audience, and receives the members of her own family, cabinet ministers, &c. Beyond it is the Queen's dressing-room. There is also a splendidly fitted up apartment, used as the supper-room. One of the rooms was the birth-place of James, the son of James II., afterwards styled the Pretender.

St. James's Square is 138 yards in diameter, and has in the centre a circular sheet of water, from the middle of which rises a statue of William III.

In Pall Mall East is Suffolk Street, which contains the gallery of the Society of British Artists:

it is entered by a portico, and consists of a suite of six rooms. This society was instituted in 1823, for the annual exhibition and sale of the works of living artists in painting, sculpture, architecture, and engraving. Near it is a house, erected in 1821, for the exhibition of the Society of Water-Colour Drawings. The British Institution, in Pall Mall, is another gallery for the exhibition of paintings.

COVENT GARDEN, LONG-ACRE, &c.

Covent Garden, or, as it was originally called, Convent Garden, anciently belonged to the abbots of Westminster, and extended from Drury Lane to St. Martin's Lane. On the dissolution it was granted to the Duke of Somerset, and afterwards to the Earl of Bedford, whose descendant, Francis, let it on a building lease, and had a church erected by Inigo Jones, who also constructed the piazza, which still remains, on the north-east. This church, which stood on the west side, was burnt down in 1795, but was rebuilt by Mr. Hardwicke, on the plan of Inigo Jones, and is now one of the most pleasing edifices in London. It has an illuminated dial. In the churchyard are buried Samuel Butler, the famous author of 'Hudibras'; Dr. Wolcot, better known as Peter Pindar; and many other persons of note. The space of ground between the church and the market, is the place where the elections for Westminster generally take place. The present market for fruits, flowers, and vegetables, was re-erected, from designs by Mr. Fowler, in 1829-30. It consists of three ranges of shops, running from east to west, intersected by three alleys, which perforate the area longitudinally, and three which intersect it. The market is altogether extremely commodious and handsome.

Covent Garden Theatre is a great ornament to Bow Street: a patent was granted for a theatre here, soon after the Restoration, to Sir W. Davenant, whose company was called the "Duke's servants," out of compliment to the Duke of York, the king's brother. In 1732, a new theatre was opened here by the celebrated Rich, which was burnt down in 1808. The present edifice was then erected, and opened on the 18th of September of the following year, under the management of Mr. John Kemble, who attempted to raise the prices of admission, when the celebrated "O.P. (old prices) Riot" was commenced. This theatre is built in a square form; Mr. Smirke, the architect, having constructed it on the model of the grand Temple of Minerva at Athens. The audience portion of the building has lately been considerably enlarged, to fit it for the representation of German and Italian operas, which are performed here with the greatest magnificence during the summer season.

In Bow Street there is a Police Office, in which three magistrates preside. In Great Queen Street is the printing-office of Messrs. Cox and Son, which contains the press at which Benjamin Franklin worked as a journeyman, when he was in the employ of Mr. Watt of Duke Street. The Hall of the Freemasons' Tavern in this street, is one of the largest rooms in London, and is ornamented with portraits of the royal family; it is celebrated for public dinners and meetings frequently held here. In the time of Charles I. and II., Great Queen Street was the most fashionable part of the town, and contained the houses of several of the nobility. Among the most famous of its former inhabitants may be mentioned Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Sir Godfrey Kneller, and Radcliffe, the physician to Queen Anne.

Drury Lane takes its name from the mansion of the great family of the Drurys, which stood at the corner of Drury Lane, on the site of the Olympic Theatre. Drury Lane was the residence of Nell Gwynn, and Pepys gives the following account of seeing her here. May 1, 1667.—To Westminster, in the way, meeting many milkmaids with garlands upon their pails, dancing with a fiddler before them; and saw pretty Nelly standing at her lodgings door in Drury Lane, in her smock sleeves and bodice, looking upon one. She seemed a mighty pretty creature. A theatre existed here as far back as the time of Shakspeare, which was then called the Phoenix, and had originally been a cock-pit; it was destroyed in 1617, by a mob of puritans. It was, however, rebuilt, but the theatrical representations were suspended until soon after the Restoration, when the king granted a patent to Thomas Killigrew, whose players were called the King's Company, and who rebuilt the theatre on the site of the present edifice. His theatre, burnt down in 1671-2, was rebuilt by Sir C. Wren, and stood till 1741, when it was again rebuilt, but was again burnt to the ground in 1809, when the present substantial edifice was erected by B. Wyatt, Esq.

LINCOLN'S-INN-FIELDS, &c.

Lincoln's-Inn-Fields is the most extensive square in the metropolis, measuring 187 yards by 237, or 848 yards in circumference. The gardens were laid out by Inigo Jones, and occupy exactly the same space as the Great Pyramid of Egypt; he also planned the buildings, but his design was not carried out. In 1683, the patriotic Lord Russell was executed in the middle of this square. The large house at the corner of Great Queen Street, now divided into two, was built in 1686, by the Marquis of Powis, and has at different times been the residence of Sir Nathan Wright, Lord Chancellor Somers, and the Duke of Newcastle, who gave it its present appellation. In this square have also resided Earl Camden, Lord Chancellor Loughborough, Sir Fletcher Norton, speaker of the House of Commons, Lord Kenyon, Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, and Sir Richard Fanshawe.

The Royal College of Surgeons, which stands in this square, was erected by Mr. Dance, but rebuilt in 1836. The museum contains the collection of John Hunter, in which, says Sir Everard Home, we find an attempt to expose to view the gradations of nature, from the most simple state in which life is found to exist, up to the most perfect and the most complex of the animal creation—man himself. There is also an extensive collection of objects of natural history, the whole amounting to 20,000 specimens. The museum also contains several curiosities, among which is the preserved wife of Van Butchell, in a mahogany box, with a square of glass over the face.

Sir J. Soane's Museum is a suite of four rooms, containing paintings by Canaletti and Hogarth, designs by Sir J. Soane, and a choice collection of Roman, Grecian, and Egyptian antiquities; it was presented to the nation, endowed with £30,000, by the late proprietor, in 1833.

Portugal Street, to the south of Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, contains the Insolvent Debtors' Court. There are four commissioners who sit about four days in every fortnight, and are attended by barristers and agents, or attorneys. This court was established in order to release from prison the persons of those debtors who should give up their property for the benefit of their creditors. Between Lincoln's Inn Square and Chancery Lane, is situated Lincoln's Inn, of which Pennant gives the following account: The gate (leading from Chancery Lane) is of brick, but of no small ornament to the street. It was built by Sir Thomas Lovel, once a member of this Inn, and afterwards treasurer of the household to Henry VII. The other parts were rebuilt at different times, but much about the same period. None of the original building is left, for it was formed out of the house of the Black Friars, which fronted Holborn end of the palace of Ralph Nevil, Chancellor of England and Bishop of Chichester, built by him in the reign of Henry III., on a piece of ground granted to him by the king. It continued to be inhabited by some of the successors in the see. This was the original site of the Dominican or Black Friars, before they removed to this spot now known by that name. On part of the ground now covered with buildings, Henry Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, built an Inn, as it was in those days called, for himself, in which he died in 1312. The whole has retained his name. One of the bishops of Chichester, in after times, did grant leases of the buildings to certain students of the law, reserving to themselves a rent, and lodgings for themselves whenever they came to town. This seems to have taken place about the time of Henry VII. The chapel was designed by Inigo Jones; it is built upon massy pillars, and affords under its shelter an excellent walk. This work evinces that Inigo never was designed for a Gothic architect. The Lord Chancellor holds his sittings in the Great Hall. This hall is 62 feet long and 32 broad, and is ornamented with various coats of arms of members of the Inn, and a picture by Hogarth of Paul before Felix; it has also a statue of Lord Erskine, by Westmacott. In the gardens on the west side the members of the Inn have recently erected a handsome and noble hall, containing a spacious apartment for the dinners which take place in term-time, a handsome library, with a splendid collection of books, a spacious and commodious kitchen, and other apartments.

HOLBORN, &c.

The name of Holborn is derived from a stream called the Oldbourne, which formerly ran here. St. Andrew's Church, on the Hill, is a large edifice, erected in 1687 by Sir C. Wren; the interior is particularly beautiful; the famous Dr. Sacheverell preached here. Ely chapel is of great antiquity, and has a beautiful ancient Gothic window. Thavie's Inn, occupied chiefly by solicitors, now the property of the Society of Lincoln's Inn, derived its name from John Tavye, temp. Edward III.

Barnard's Inn, similarly occupied, is also situated in Holborn. Staple's Inn, near it, tenanted in the same manner, is so called from having been in ancient times the place where the wool-merchants assembled; and was given to the law students about the reign of Henry V. The hall contains some portraits and casts of the Twelve Cæsars. Furnival's Inn, also in Holborn, and also similarly occupied, was anciently the residence of the noble family of that name, now extinct; the edifice was rebuilt in 1819, from designs by Mr. Peto. Gray's Inn, one of the inns of court for the admission of gentlemen as barristers, on the right of Holborn, derived its name from having formerly been the residence of the ancient family of Gray of Wilton, by whom it was given to some law students in the reign of Edward III. The hall contains a singular oak screen, and some portraits: a spacious garden, which is open every day, also belongs to this Inn.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM, &c.

Great Russell Street, near Holborn, contains the British Museum, of which Sir Hans Sloane may be called the founder, as he offered the books and articles which had cost him £50,000, to the nation, for £20,000; in 1753 they were placed in Montagu House, one of the largest buildings in London. The Museum was afterwards increased by the addition of the Cottonian Library, which was given to the nation by its collector, Sir Robert Bruce Cotton, who was born in 1570, and died in 1662. The Harleian Library contains 7,000 MSS., collected by the Right Hon. Secretary Harley, together with the collection of Sir Simon d'Ewes, and was purchased for £10,000. The King's Libraries were presented to the public by George III., and George IV. also presented the library of his father; Dr. Burney's classical library was purchased for £13,500. Besides these and other valuable collections of books and MSS., there is the finest collection of Egyptian and other antiquities in the world, many of them presented by Col. Lethieullier; the famous Elgin Marbles, purchased for £35,000, the Herbariums of Sir Hans Sloane and Sir Joseph Banks, the latter of whom, together with Captain Cook, presented many highly interesting articles brought by them from the South Sea, &c. &c. A fine structure has lately been erected, in the Ionic style, for the custody of these valuable properties; it is from the design of Sir R. Smirke. The edifice is of noble proportions, the east wing being 500 feet in length, with a portico of four lofty columns. The ground floor contains the Reading Room, the MSS. Room, and the King's Library; the latter a splendid apartment, 300 feet long, 40 wide, and 30 high, elegantly and commodiously fitted up: the MSS. Room is of cruciform shape, and contains MSS. of immense value. The Reading Room is large, and conveniently arranged with tables for the purposes of study, and every other appliance necessary for the pursuit of literary objects. The ground floor also contains the Gallery of Antiquities, comprising an immense number of ancient sculptures, the most recherché specimens of ancient art, medals, gold coins, &c., and the famous Portland Vase. The ground floor of the old building contains the old library of printed books; the hall has several valuable and beautiful sculptures; the ceiling of the great staircase is decorated by the art of Charles de Fosse, the famous French painter, and has also some fine landscapes by James Rousseau. The upper floor contains curiosities from North America and the South Sea Islands, and other parts of the less known portions of the world. In the centre of the first room is the original Magna Charta, in a glass-case; the other rooms chiefly contain curiosities of all kinds in natural history, brought from every part of the globe. The saloon, also, is a splendid room, adorned with numerous fine paintings. The Museum is open to the public every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, except on the first week in January, May, and September, and on Christmas-day, Good Friday, and Ash Wednesday. The Reading Room is open every day except Sunday, and the periods just mentioned; but the Gallery of Antiquities can only be visited under certain restrictions.

In the neighbourhood of Russell Street, &c., there are several spacious and handsome squares, containing substantial and commodious residences. Russell Square contains a colossal bronze statue of the late Duke of Bedford, by Westmacott; Sir Thomas Lawrence resided at No. 65 Bloomsbury Square, formerly the residence of Lady Russell—it is ornamented with a colossal bronze statue of the Right Hon. Charles James Fox, by Westmacott. Tavistock Square is remarkable for a peculiar echo, which is perceived there. Euston Square contains St. Pancras New Church, which was erected by Mr. Inwood, at a cost of £76,000, in 1822, and is built in imitation of the temple of Erectheus at Athens; it has a beautiful portico, and a steeple 168 feet in height. The interior is very elegant; the pulpit and reading-desk are formed from the tree well known as the Fairlop Oak.

Guildford Street, a fine range of buildings, contains the Foundling Hospital, a structure consisting of two brick wings, between which is the chapel, which is much resorted to; the organ was presented by Handel, and there is a beautiful altar-piece by West. The interior of the house contains several fine paintings. The project of a foundling hospital was first promulgated in Queen Anne's reign, and several persons left legacies for the purpose of forwarding it, but it was not till 1739 that a charter was obtained from George II., by the spirited exertions of Mr. Thomas Coram, the master of a vessel trading to the American colonies. The object of the institution is the maintenance and education of exposed and deserted young children, but the character and the necessities of the mother, together with the desertion of the father, are at first strictly inquired into. There are generally about 460 children under the protection of this institution; the funds are about £13,250, resulting from rents, dividends, produce of the chapel, children's work, general benefactions, and other sources. The boys are apprenticed to different employments at the age of twelve or thirteen, and the girls at fourteen.

ST. GILES'S, &c.

In Broad Street, in the parish of St. Giles, stands the church of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, a fine building of Portland stone, erected by Henry Flitcroft in 1730, on the site of an ancient hospital, before which Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, was burnt in the reign of Henry V. There is a tower at the west end with a fine steeple; the Resurrection Gate, at the north-west, has a fine bronze representation of the Resurrection. This church contains a monument to the memory of Sir Roger l'Estrange; it is also the burial-place of Andrew Marvel, of Richard Pendrell, the conductor of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester; of Chapman, the first translator of Homer, and of the great sculptor Flaxman. Sir J. Soane is interred in the burying-ground of the parish in St. Pancras.

OXFORD STREET, &c.

Between Oxford Street and Camden Town, is an entrance to the Regent's Park: this extensive piece of ground originally belonged to a palace of Queen Elizabeth, which stood towards the north of the Tottenham Court Road, and was pulled down in 1791; the property was subsequently let to various persons, but on the expiration of the leases it reverted to the crown, and in 1814 those alterations were made in it, from designs by Mr. Nash, which have rendered it such an ornament to the metropolis. The park extends over about 450 acres, and is nearly circular; it is laid out in shrubberies, ornamented with a fine sheet of water, and intersected by roads in various directions. There are several villas within the enclosure, and it is entirely surrounded by fine, handsome, and elegant residences, inhabited by noble and opulent persons. Cumberland Terrace, erected by Mr. Nurse, is a fine specimen of architecture. Gloucester Gate, one of the entrances, is a neat Doric structure, and near it is the entrance to the Zoological Gardens, the property of the Zoological Society, which was instituted in 1826, by Sir Stamford Raffles, Lord Auckland, Sir H. Davy, and other scientific persons. The Gardens and Menagerie were opened in 1828, and have become a place of great resort, for besides containing an interesting and valuable collection of animals, they are laid out with great taste and effect. They have also been added to by a piece of ground on the other side of the road, under which a tunnel has been constructed. William IV., in 1830, presented the society with the animals from the Tower. The Zoological Society has also an interesting Museum in Leicester Square. Near these gardens there is an elegant bridge, called Macclesfield Bridge, crossing the Regent's Canal, on the northern boundary of the park; it was erected from designs by Mr. Morgan, and consists of three arches, supported by cast-iron Doric pillars. In this park there is also a building in the occupation of the Toxophilite Society, attached to which there are five acres of land for archery sports. The Ring is a fine level drive, planted on either side with trees, and surrounding a tasteful shrubbery. On one side of Regent's Park stands the Colosseum, so called from its immense size; it was erected in 1827-8, for the purpose of exhibiting Mr. Horner's Panorama of London. Oxford Street contains the Princess's Theatre, originally a bazaar; it is a commodious and handsome building: also the bazaar, known as the Pantheon. Grosvenor Square, to the south of Oxford Street, contains six acres of ground; in the centre there is a gilt equestrian statue of George I. Portman Square is 606 yards in circumference. Cavendish Square contains a gilt equestrian statue of William, Duke of Cumberland. Hanover Square contains a colossal statue of Pitt, by Chantrey. In Regent Street is the Polytechnic Institution, which is fitted up with all kinds of beautiful scientific apparatus, with which the most interesting experiments are performed, and lectures are delivered on subjects connected with practical science. This street has lately been considerably improved, by the removing of the colonnade forming the Quadrant which stood at its southern extremity. The County Fire Office forms a handsome termination of the view up Waterloo Place, from Pall Mall.

PICCADILLY, &c.

Piccadilly contains several handsome residences, the principal of which is that at the western extremity, Apsley House, the town residence of the Duke of Wellington. It was built originally for the Lord Chancellor Apsley, by the Messrs. Adam; having become the residence of the Duke of Wellington in 1828, it was entirely re-constructed by Sir J. Wyattville, and is now an extremely handsome and commodious residence, containing several noble apartments: Canova's celebrated colossal statue of Napoleon, stands at the foot of the grand staircase. Burlington House, also in Piccadilly, is the residence of Lord Cavendish; it has a singularly beautiful façade, hidden, however, by a brick wall. Devonshire House, Gloucester House, Lord Eldon's residence, Lord Ashburton's residence, are all of them noble specimens of architecture, and extremely commodious residences. Burlington Arcade, next to Burlington House, is a covered avenue, 210 yards in length. The Albany is a fine range of buildings, erected by Sir W. Chambers, and which was inhabited by the late Duke of York; the gardens are now covered with buildings which are let out in lodgings to the nobility. St. George's Hospital is situated at Hyde Park Corner; it was erected in 1828 from designs by Mr. Wilkins, and the principal façade is 200 feet in length; it contains 29 wards and 460 beds, besides a theatre for the delivery of lectures. The hospital was established in 1733. The Egyptian Hall, which derives its name from the style of architecture, was erected in 1812, from designs by Mr. G. F. Robinson. It is divided into various compartments, which are used as exhibition rooms. At the western extremity of Piccadilly near Apsley House, are two arches, one leading into Hyde Park, and the other forming an entrance to Buckingham Palace, down Constitution Hill. The arch which forms the entrance to Hyde Park was erected in 1828, and has a frontage of 107 feet. On the opposite side is another arch of the Corinthian order, erected from designs by Mr. Nash, surmounted by a colossal equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, by Wyatt, which forms a prominent object from every point of view.

HYDE PARK, &c.

Hyde Park, which derives its name from having been the manor of the hyde belonging to the Abbey of Westminster, comprises an area of 395 acres, and contains much beautiful scenery, with numerous fine trees. It is bounded on the west by Kensington Gardens. At the south-east corner of the park there is a colossal statue by Westmacott, with the following inscription:—To Arthur, Duke of Wellington, and his brave companions in arms, this statue of Achilles, cast from cannon taken in the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Toulouse, and Waterloo, is inscribed by their country women. There is also an inscription on the base:—Placed on this spot on the 18th June, 1822, by command of his Majesty George IV. The figure is about 18 feet high, and weighs upwards of 30 tons. The Serpentine River is a sheet of water in the form of a parallelogram, constructed between 1730 and 1733, by order of Queen Caroline, and is much frequented by bathers in summer, and by skaters in winter; the west end is crossed by a handsome stone bridge. Beyond this, to the south, are the Knightsbridge Barracks, opposite to which the immense building for the Great Exhibition for 1851 has been erected, under the superintendence of Mr. Paxton. There are five entrance gates with handsome lodges; it forms one of the finest structures in the world.

GREEN PARK, &c.

On the opposite side of Piccadilly is Constitution Hill, which separates Hyde Park from the Green Park and that called St. James's. The Green Park is situated between the two other parks, and on the north side is one of the reservoirs of the Chelsea Water Works. At the corner of the Green Park stands Sutherland House, which was erected in 1825, by Mr. B. Wyatt, for the Duke of York, on whose death it was purchased by the Marquis of Stafford, whose son, the Duke of Sutherland, now resides in it. It has four fronts cased with stone, the principal one, on the north, having a portico of eight Corinthian columns. The apartments are of noble proportions, and luxuriously fitted up; the picture gallery is 130 feet in length.

Spencer House, the family residence of Earl Spencer, is a noble Palladian edifice, the façade towards the Green Park being ornamented with statues and vases; the library contains one of the finest collection of books in the kingdom.

BUCKINGHAM PALACE, ST. JAMES'S PARK, &c.

St. James's Park was enclosed and laid out by Henry VIII., after he had built St. James's Palace, before which time it was a mere marsh. Charles II. greatly improved it, had it increased by the addition of several fields, and planted it with rows of lime trees, and employed Le Notre to lay out the Mall, a vista nearly a mile long, which then had an iron hoop at the end of it, for playing at a game called the mall, from which this fine avenue derives its name. A canal was also constructed here 100 feet in breadth, and 2,800 in length. Succeeding sovereigns gave the people permission to walk here, until it has become public property. In 1828 the park was much improved. Bird-cage Walk has been straightened, and there is a handsome Doric chapel near the barracks, called Wellington Chapel.

On the west side stands Buckingham Palace, the town residence of Her Majesty and the Royal Family. A palace was erected here in 1703, on the site of what was called the Mulberry Gardens, by the learned John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham. In 1761 it became the residence of Queen Charlotte, and here all her children were born; several of the Royal Family have also been married here. Between 1825 and 1830 the building was entirely re-constructed, under the superintendence of Mr. Nash; it was afterwards much improved and added to, under the superintendence of Mr. Blore. The entrance-hall is paved with variegated marble; the ceiling rests upon twenty-four white marble columns, ornamented with Corinthian capitals of mosaic gold. The grand staircase, leading from the hall to the state rooms, which are fitted up with great splendour, is formed of solid blocks of white marble. The Grand Saloon is ornamented with Corinthian columns, to imitate lapis lazuli, which have gilt capitals, supporting a rich cornice and frieze; the floor is inlaid with satin and Amboyna wood. The Throne Room is hung with crimson silk, and richly gilt, the ceiling being finally embossed, and the frieze containing bassi rilievi, designed by Stothard and executed by Bailey, representing the wars of York and Lancaster; the throne stands in an alcove at the end of the apartment. The Picture Gallery is a noble saloon, 164 feet by 28, appropriately ornamented and well lighted. The grand entrance in front of the palace is formed by a front of superb Italian architecture, designed and executed by Mr. Barry; and part of St. James's Park has been enclosed, in order to form a new and extensive esplanade in front of the palace. The arch which formerly stood here was modelled from that of Constantine at Rome; it was adorned with sculpture by Bailey and Westmacott.

In the centre of the park there is a fine sheet of ornamental water, and a shrubbery beautifully laid out. On the east side is the back of the Admiralty and Horse Guards, and the front of the Treasury, forming an extensive façade of a very imposing appearance. Opposite the Horse Guards there is a fine open space of ground, in which one of the regiments of the Foot Guards parades daily. Two great guns stand in this area, one of which, a Turkish piece of ordnance, brought from Alexandria by the British troops, is of immense length, and is carved with various emblematical figures. The other is the mortar brought from the siege of Cadiz in 1812, and presented by the Spanish government: it is 8 feet long, 12 inches in diameter at the mouth, and capable of throwing a shell three miles. It stands on an allegorical carriage, cast at Woolwich: the weight of the whole is 16 tons.

CHARING CROSS, &c.

Hartshorn Lane, Charing Cross, is supposed to have been the birth-place of Ben Jonson. When a little child, says Fuller, he lived in Hartshorn Lane, Charing Cross, when his mother married a bricklayer for her second husband. He was first bred in a private school in St. Martin's Court; then in Westminster School. In the time of the second Duke of Buckingham, there was a celebrated house of entertainment at Charing Cross, called 'Locket's Ordinary,' in which the scene is often laid in the plays of Vanbrugh, Cibber, &c. It was frequented by the celebrated Sir George Etheridge, of whom the following anecdote is told in Birch's MSS. :— Sir G. Etheridge discontinued Locket's ordinary, having run up a score which he could not conveniently discharge. Mrs. Locket sent one to dun him, and to threaten him with a prosecution. He bid the messenger tell her that he would kiss her if she stirred a step in it. When this answer was brought back, she called for her hood and scarf, and told her husband, who interposed, that "she'd see if there was any fellow alive who had the impudence." "Prythee, my dear, don't be so rash, said her husband; you don't know what a man may do in his passion." The "Rummer" tavern, which stood in the vicinity, is that where Prior was found, when a boy, reading Horace, by the Earl of Dorset, who took him under his patronage, and removed him from his uncle, who kept the tavern. It was over the shop of Mr. Egerton, bookseller, that Thomson wrote a part of his "Seasons."

A splendid palace, appropriated for the reception of the kings of Scotland when they visited London, stood on the site of the present Scotland Yard.

The Metropolitan Police Office is situated here. The metropolitan police, established by the late Sir R. Peel, comprehends all portions of the metropolis and its vicinity, out of the jurisdiction of the city, and within twelve miles of Charing Cross. This district is formed into divisions of various sizes, but with the same number of men and officers; and there is in each division a station or watch-house, from which point the duty is carried on. Each division is known by a local name and a letter of the alphabet, and is divided into eight sections, and each section into eight beats. There are as many companies in this force as there are divisions, each company comprising 1 superintendent, 4 inspectors, 16 sergeants, and 144 constables. These companies are again divided into sixteen parties, each consisting of 1 sergeant and 9 men, and 4 sergeants' parties form an inspector's party. The entire police force is under the superintendence of three commissioners, whose office is in Scotland Yard. Each man has the letter of his division marked on the collar of his coat, together with a number which corresponds with his name in the books of the office. The first sixteen numbers in each division are the sergeants. The policemen are all dressed in blue uniform, and at night they wear dark-brown greatcoats: each of them has a rattle, a staff, and a lantern. They are always on duty, but more are employed at night than in the day. One part is on duty from nine in the evening till six o'clock in the morning. The day police are relieved at certain periods in the same way.

In Whitehall Yard stands the Naval and Military Library and Museum, a plain and commodious edifice, containing more than 1,200 volumes, and several curious and interesting articles, among which is the sword worn by the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo.

THE ADMIRALTY, &c.

The Admiralty Office, a large handsome building of brick and stone, stands on the right of Whitehall. There is here a large hall and several offices, besides six fine houses for the lords of the Admiralty. The Admiralty office, says Pennant, stood originally in Duke Street, Westminster; but, in the reign of King William, it was removed to the present spot, to the house then called Wallingford, I believe, from its having been inhabited by the Knollys, Viscounts Wallingford. From the roof, the pious Usher, Archbishop of Armagh, then living here with the Countess of Peterborough, was prevailed on to take the last sight of his beloved master, Charles I., when brought on the scaffold before Whitehall. He sunk at the horror of the sight, and was carried in a swoon to his apartment. Wallingford House was the birth-place of George Villiers, second Duke of Buckingham.

The Horse Guards, beyond the Admiralty, is so called from being the station where that body of troops generally do duty. It is a handsome and substantial edifice of hewn stone, erected by Ware about 1730, having a centre and two wings; there are arched foot and carriage ways through it from Whitehall into St. James's Park, and the centre is surmounted by a cupola containing an excellent clock. On the front, towards Whitehall, there are two small archways where horse soldiers in full uniform mount guard daily. The office of the commander-in-chief is in this building. On the opposite side of the way is Whitehall Chapel, or Banqueting-room, which is all that remains of the royal palace of Whitehall, the greater portion of which was destroyed by fire in 1697. The mansion was originally built by Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, at the commencement of the thirteenth century. It then became the property of the Archbishops of York, who used it as their town residence, until it was purchased by Henry VIII. of Cardinal Wolsey, in 1530. It then became the residence of the court, and so continued till its accidental destruction. Charles I. was executed on a scaffold in front of this building, on the 30th January, 1649, being conducted through an opening in the north wall, which now forms a doorway to a more modern erection. The principal room is an oblong apartment forty feet in height. The ceiling is painted with a representation of the apotheosis of James I. by Rubens, who was paid £3,000 for it; Cipriani, who since retouched it, received £2,000 for doing so. This room was converted into a chapel-royal by George I., and service is now performed in it every Sunday morning and afternoon. The entire building was repaired in 1829.

Between this edifice and the Thames is Whitehall Gardens, in which stands a fine bronze statue of James II., executed by Grinlin Gibbons, a year previous to the abdication of James. One of the handsome mansions which stand here was the town residence of the late Sir Robert Peel, and that in which he died in August, 1850.

THE TREASURY, &c.

Near the Horse Guards stands the handsome stone building used as the Treasury; that portion which stands in Whitehall formed part of the ancient palace belonging to Cardinal Wolsey; the façade towards the park, designed by Kent, consists of three stories in the Tuscan, the Doric, and the Ionic styles of architecture, the whole being surmounted by a pediment. This, together with the Council-office, which stands next to it, has recently been much improved by the construction of a regular and handsome façade towards Whitehall, extending from the Treasury to the corner of Downing Street, through which it is continued for the offices of the Foreign and Home departments. The Council Chamber, on the west end of the building, is a noble apartment, adorned with Ionic columns, the shafts of which are in imitation of Sienna marble, and the capitals of white marble; her Majesty's Privy Council hold their sittings in this apartment, to decide on appeals from the tribunals of the East and West Indies. The Board of Trade also holds its sittings in this building. The secretary of state for the Home department has likewise offices here, and those of the secretaries of state for the Foreign and Colonial departments are situated in Downing Street, where is also the official residence of the prime minister.

At the end of Parliament Street are Westminster Abbey, Westminster Hall, the Houses of Parliament, Westminster Bridge, and Palace Yard.

Westminster Hall was erected by William Rufus about 1097, and here, says Stow, King William kept his fast of Whitsonside very royally. It was at first only a banqueting-room to a palace of still greater antiquity, which stood on the site of Old Palace Yard, and which, according to Stow, hath been the principal seat and palace of all the kings of England since the Conquest; for here have they in the great hall kept their feasts of coronation especially, and other solemn feasts, as at Christmas and such like, most commonly; for proof whereof, I find recorded, that in the year 1236, and the 20th of Henry III., on the 29th of December, William de Haverhull, the king's treasurer, is commanded, that upon the day of Circumcision of our Lord, he caused six thousand poor people to be fed at Westminster, for the state of the king, the queen, and their children. Henry's successors held their feasts here; and again, to quote from Stow—This great hall was begun to be repaired in the year 1397 by Richard II., who caused the walls, windows, and roof to be taken down and new made, with a stately porch, and divers lodgings of a marvellous work, and with great costs; all which he levied of strangers banished or flying out of their countries, who obtained license to remain in this land by the king's charters, which they had purchased with great sums of money; John Boterell being then clerk of the works. This hall being finished in the year 1398, the same king kept a most royal Christmas there, with daily joustings and runnings at tilt; whereunto resorted such a number of people, that there was every day spent twenty-eight or twenty-six oxen, and three hundred sheep, besides fowl without number. He caused a gown for himself to be made of gold, garnished with pearl and precious stones, to the value of three thousand marks; he was guarded by Cheshire men, and had about him commonly thirteen bishops, besides barons, knights, esquires, and others more than needed; inasmuch, that to the household came every day to meet ten thousand people, as appeareth by the messes told out from the kitchen to three hundred servitors. Parliaments were frequently held here in ancient times, and this hall has been always the usual place of the administration of justice. It is one of the largest rooms in Europe unsupported by pillars, being 270 feet long, 90 feet high, and 74 feet broad. It is ornamented in all parts with angels supporting the arms of Richard II., or those of Edward the Confessor, the hart couchant under a tree being a device of the former monarch. The roof is very curiously constructed of chesnut wood. The whole of the interior has recently been coated with Portland stone.

THE COURTS OF LAW, &c.

The Courts of Chancery, Queen's Bench, Exchequer, and Common Pleas, have been held in Westminster Hall since the reign of Henry III. Charles I. was tried here in 1648, and peers and distinguished personages accused of high treason, and other high crimes and misdemeanours, are generally tried here, as was the case with the late Lord Melville and Warren Hastings. The coronation feasts also take place in this hall. On the north side of it are the Courts of Law, a handsome range of buildings designed by Sir J. Soane, the first on the right hand being that of the Queen's Bench. The Lord Chief Justice of England, assisted by four puisne judges, presides in it. The Court of Exchequer is an institution of great antiquity, having been established by William I., and, until within a few years, had the power of judging both according to law and to equity. The Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and three other barons, preside as judges. Besides these there is a fifth, called Cursitor Baron, who has, however, no judicial capacity, and whose office is almost a sinecure. The exchequer records are of great importance; the most ancient of them, the great roll of the fifth year of the reign of Stephen, consists of sixteen large rolls, written on both sides. The Court of Common Pleas has a general jurisdiction, and extends to all England. This court is presided over by the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, assisted by four puisne justices, and has several officers belonging to it. The Vice-Chancellor's Court is surmounted by a dome; it was erected in 1823. The Vice-Chancellor assists the Lord Chancellor in hearing motions, &c. The Lord Chancellor's Court is a spacious square room, with a handsome circular gallery, and is surmounted by a dome. The Court of Chancery is the highest court of judicature in England next to the parliament, and has two jurisdictions, one at common law and the other at equity; the former, however, is seldom or never resorted to. The Lord High Chancellor of England is the sole judge, and he is created so by his having the custody of the Great Seal. The Lord Chancellor has hitherto had a seat in the cabinet, and been removable at pleasure, but in consequence of the frequent change of chancellors which takes place with every change of the sovereign's advisers, and which is productive of much delay and inconvenience in the Court of Chancery, it is now generally supposed to be the intention of the legislature to separate the political and judicial functions of the Chancellor at an early period. In Westminster Hall there is also another court, for the Master of the Rolls.

THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT, &c.

In Old Palace Yard, at the back of Westminster Hall, stood St. Stephen's Chapel, which was erected by King Stephen. Edward III. rebuilt it in 1347, and made it a collegiate church, with a dean and twelve secular priests belonging to it. It was afterwards surrendered to Edward VI., who appropriated it to the purposes of the parliament. The Commons of Great Britain held their sessions in it till 1834, on the 16th of October, in which year a conflagration took place which entirely destroyed the Chapel, as well as the House of Lords, together with the Painted Chamber, which was used as a place of conference between the Lords and Commons, and where the celebrated interviews occurred between the two houses which preceded the Revolution of 1688. The celebrated Star Chamber, which took its name from the Starræ, or Jewish covenants deposited there by Richard I., was also destroyed. Some temporary buildings were erected from designs by Sir R. Spirkke, at a cost of £30,000, in which the Houses of Lords and Commons might hold their sittings until the completion of the New Houses of Parliament. In 1836, the new building was commenced by the throwing up of an embankment 30 feet wide, extending to the second arch of Westminster Bridge. It is as yet far from completion, and the expense, which was at first estimated at £700,000 or £800,000, has increased, by successive parliamentary grants, to nearly two millions. The structure, which covers nine acres of ground, presents towards the river a magnificent façade of highly ornamented Gothic, extending from Westminster Bridge to Millbank, about 900 feet in length. It is three stories high, and divided into a centre and wings, the centre being elevated by a loftier and more enriched battlement above the other parts of the building, and terminated by octagonal embattled towers, with oriel windows in the centre. Each wing will be terminated by two solid square towers. Toward Abingdon Street, the building is terminated by a stupendous square tower, which occupies an area of 100 feet square, and, when completed, will be nearly 400 feet in height. This will be the royal entrance, and the upper part of the tower will consist of fire-proof apartments, designed as receptacles for the national records. A corresponding tower, towards the bridge and on the other side of Westminster Hall, from which will be formed an entrance to the chambers, is also in the course of erection. The House of Commons stands in a central part of the building, on the principal floor, between Westminster Hall and the river front. The House of Lords, which occupies a corresponding situation on the other side, is a splendid specimen of Gothic architecture. This spacious apartment is highly ornamented with exquisite carving, and there are galleries round it for the accommodation of visitors; that facing the throne is used by reporters for the daily press. The throne is a beautiful piece of workmanship, surmounted by a canopy, and highly embellished.

NEW PALACE YARD, &c.

Opposite the stupendous building appropriated to the parliament, is Westminster Abbey and St.

Margaret's Church, which are already described. Opposite New Palace Yard there is a fine bronze statue of Canning. The Guildhall, Westminster, to the west of New Palace Yard, is erected on part of the ancient sanctuary. It is an octagonal building, entered through a vestibule supported by massy Doric columns. It is used as a court of sessions for Westminster, and here is also held the Court of Review; behind it is a quadrangular Doric structure, used as the mews for the members of the two houses of parliament. Near it is a handsome Gothic edifice, erected by Mr. Inwood, for the purposes of the Westminster Hospital, which was instituted in 1719 for the relief of the sick and needy from all parts of the metropolis. It contains 230 beds: patients are admitted by the order of a governor, except cases of accidents, which are taken in at any hour of the day without recommendation. A gift of £30, or three guineas per annum, constitutes a trustee.

MILLBANK, &c.

At the western extremity of Westminster is Millbank, in which stands the Church of St. John the Evangelist, one of the fifty new churches erected soon after the time of Sir C. Wren. This church is about 140 feet long, 90 broad, and 50 high, and was the first church in London that was lighted with gas. Millbank Penitentiary is an extensive building of the octagon form, enclosing about eighteen acres of ground, in which there are seven distinct though connected buildings, all the rooms in them facing the residence of the principal master, which is in the centre. The prison has accommodation for about 500 prisoners of either sex; and all the male inmates are employed in various manufactures, while the females are under the control of officers of their own sex. This person is under the control of a committee named by the Privy Council, and no one can be admitted without an order from the Secretary of State, or unless he is accompanied by one of the committee. In front of this building there is a fine gravel walk along the bank of the Thames.

THE BRIDGES.

Near the Penitentiary is Vauxhall Bridge, affording the inhabitants of Lambeth, Vauxhall, &c., an easy means of communication with the houses of parliament, Pimlico, and the vicinity. This bridge was originally projected by Mr. R. Dodd, but was erected from designs, first by Mr. Rennie, afterwards by Mr. Walker, at an expense of about £150,000, which is to be defrayed by a toll. The first stone was laid in 1813, and the structure was completed in 1816. It consists of nine cast-iron arches, 78 feet in span, and 29 high; the piers are faced with Kentish ragstone and Roman cement: the entire length of the bridge is 860 feet. The next bridge towards London is that of Westminster, which crosses the Thames at a spot where it is 1,223 feet in width. This bridge, which it is now proposed to pull down in consequence of the expense incurred in keeping it in a proper state of repair, was commenced in 1739, and completed in 1750, from designs by Monsieur Labelye, and at a cost of £389,000, which was defrayed by parliament. The bridge is entirely of Portland stone, and consists of fourteen piers, and thirteen large and two smaller arches, all of them semicircular; that in the centre is 76 feet in width, and the rest decrease four feet each from the other; so that the last two arches of the thirteen larger ones are each 52 feet. The two small arches at the abutments are 20 feet wide. The bridge is 44 feet in width, having on either side a footway seven feet broad for passengers. There was formerly a stone balustrade on the parapets, but that has been removed to lighten the weight on the substructure repairs which have lately taken place. The next bridge to this is the elegant Hungerford Suspension Bridge for foot passengers, which crosses the river from Hungerford Market to the Lambeth bank. There is a handsome arched approach from either bank of the river, the road or pathway being stone piers in the Italian style, by means of iron chains; on the Hungerford side the platform joins the colonnade between the two taverns: the expense incurred in the formation of this bridge was about £102,300.

Next to this is the Strand or Waterloo Bridge, a noble structure, commenced in 1811, and finished June 18, 1817; it was projected by Mr. G. Dodd, who designed it, but he was succeeded by Mr. Rennie, under whose superintendence it was completed. It is a plain, but noble and imposing structure, and the outside courses are constructed of Cornish, and the balustrades of Aberdeen granite. The arches are elliptical, and of an equal size, and thus the road over them is level, and the bridge in this respect is different from any other in London.

Beyond this bridge is that of Blackfriars, a handsome structure, erected from designs by Mr. R. Mylne, between 1760 and 1768, at a cost of £152,840, which was defrayed by a toll. There is a Latin inscription in a tin-plate over the first stone, stating the circumstances of its erection, and that the citizens had unanimously voted that it should bear the name of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham. There are nine elliptical arches, the centre one being 100 feet in width. The entire length is 995 feet.

Between Blackfriars and London Bridge, is that of Southwark, a stupendous structure, originally projected by Mr. John Wyatt, but commenced on the 23d of September, 1814, under the superintendence of Mr. Rennie, and completed March, 1819, at a total expense of £800,000, which is to be defrayed by tolls. This bridge consists of three cast-iron arches, supported by massive stone piers and abutments.

London Bridge, which is the next and the last bridge by which the river is crossed, is erected about 200 feet to the west of a more ancient structure, which was commenced in 1176, and completed in 1209; it was then covered with houses, connected by large arches of timber; in 1212 a fire broke out at the Southwark extremity, and a great multitude came from London to assist in extinguishing it, when the flames communicated with the other side of the bridge, and upwards of 3000 persons perished by fire and by water. Hans Holbein and John Bunyan at one time resided in the houses on this bridge, all of which were pulled down in 1756. The bridge then consisted of nineteen stone arches of various sizes, but having long been considered dangerous for vessels, and inconvenient for passengers, an act of parliament was passed in 1823, for building one more commodious and better adapted for the purposes of traffic. The first pile of the works was driven on March 15, 1824, and the lord mayor, Garratt, laid the first stone on the 15th June, 1825, in presence of a large number of the nobility and gentry. The structure was designed by the late Mr. Rennie, but was completed by his sons, who finished it by the 1st August, 1831, when it was opened by William IV. with great ceremony and magnificence. The length of the bridge, including the abutments, is 928 feet.

SOUTHWARK, &c.

On the Surrey side of London Bridge is the High Street of the borough of Southwark, to the right of which is the ancient church of St. Saviour's, and the Ladye Chapel, of which a fine view is obtained from the High Street. It was known as St. Mary Overie, until the union of the two parishes of St. Margaret and St. Mary Magdalene, in the reign of Henry I. This church, says Stow, or some other in place thereof, was of old time, long before the Conquest, a house of sisters, founded by a maiden named Mary; unto the which house and sisters she left (as was left to her by her parents) the oversight and profits of a cross ferry, or traverse ferry, over the Thames, there kept before that any bridge was built. This house of sisters was after, by Swithin, a noble lady, converted into a college of priests, who, in place of the ferry, built a bridge of timber, and from time to time kept the same in good reparations, but lastly the same bridge was built of stone; and then, in the year 1106, was this church again founded for canons regular, by William Pont de l'Arche and William Dauncy, knights, Normans. The priory was burnt down about 1207, and soon afterwards removed further into the country. Peter de Rupibus, or de la Roche, continues Stow, founded a large chapel of St. Mary Magdalene, in the said church of St. Marie Overie, which chapel was after appointed to be the parish church for the inhabitants near adjoining. The Ladye Chapel, as it is now called, is one of the most beautiful specimens of ancient architecture in the metropolis. The church is a noble structure, with three aisles, and is remarkable as the spot from which Hollar took his views of London before and after the Fire. There are monuments here to the memory of William Wickham, Bishop of Lincoln; Bishop Andrews; Gower, the celebrated poet, contemporary with Chaucer; and Abraham Newland, Esq., formerly chief cashier of the Bank of England. The dramatic authors Fletcher and Massinger lie buried here in one grave.

On the opposite side of the road is St. Thomas's Hospital, a large building, composed of four quadrangular courts. The front, towards the High Street, is ornamented with a brass statue, by Schneemakers, of Edward VI., with a representation of the halt and the maimed beneath him. This hospital was founded by Richard, prior of Bermondsey, in 1213, and in 1538 was surrendered to Henry VIII. The mayor and citizens of London, in 1551, purchased the manor of Southwark from Edward VI., together with this hospital, which they repaired and enlarged, admitting into it 260 of the poor, the sick, and the helpless; in 1553 it was incorporated by the king, together with Bridewell, Bethlehem, St. Bartholomew, and Christ's hospitals. The original edifice having been much injured by time, as well as by fire, was rebuilt by voluntary subscription in 1693, and afterwards considerably added to by the governors in 1732.

To the south of this hospital stands Guy's Hospital, another benevolent foundation, which owes its origin to Mr. Guy, an opulent citizen and bookseller of London, who, after having given immense sums to St. Thomas's, in 1721, at the age of 76 commenced another hospital, which he lived to see nearly completed: its erection and foundation cost him £18,793, and he bequeathed it an endowment of £219,499. Another great benefactor was Thomas Hunt, Esq., who, in 1829, bequeathed it the sum of £200,000, on condition of accommodation being provided for 100 additional patients. The building is entered by an iron gate, leading into a square, in the centre of which stands a brass statue of Guy, by Schneemakers. There is an inscription on the front of the pedestal, the other sides of which are ornamented by reliefs, representing the arms of Mr. Guy, our Saviour healing the impotent Man, and the good Samaritan. The edifice itself consists of a centre and two wings, with a separate edifice for lunatics at the back; one of the wings contains a hall and rooms for public business, and the other a chapel, in which is a beautiful and justly-celebrated monument to the memory of Guy, who is represented in his liveryman's robe, raising from the ground a half-naked, emaciated-looking pauper, and pointing to the hospital, into which another sufferer is being conveyed. It was executed by T. Bacon, and cost £1,000. In the vaults are the bodies of Mr. Guy and Mr. Hunt.

At No. 75, in the Borough, is the Talbot Inn, which, as an inscription points out, is the place of meeting of Chaucer's Canterbury Pilgrims: the original house, called the Tabard, was burnt down in 1676, and the present building was erected on its site. The lines in the poem referring to it are these:—

"Befell that in that season, on a day,
In Southwarke, at the Tabard, as I lay,
Reddie to wenden on my pilgrimago
To Canterbury, with devout courage,
At night was come into that hosterie,
Well nine-and-twentie in a compaignie,
Of sundrie folke, by adventure yfall,
In fellowship, and pilgrimes were they all,
That toward Canterbury wolden ride,
The chambers and the stables weren wide,
And well we weren cased at the best."

The Town Hall of Southwark is a building of brick, with a stone façade, consisting of a rustic basement, surmounted by several Ionic pilasters, with a balustrade above them. A court of record is held here every Monday, by the steward of the city of London. The elections of the members for this borough generally take place in front of the town-hall. At the corner of Dover Street stands St. George's Church, a brick building, with stone quoins, erected in 1737. Cocker, the arithmetician, was buried here in the old church, which was built in 1695; and Bishop Bonner, who died in the Marshalsea prison, was interred in the adjoining cemetery, beneath the east window.

Eastward of Southwark are situated Bermondsey, Rotherhithe, and Deptford, which connect the metropolis with Greenwich.

The Queen's Bench Prison is an extensive building, surrounded by a lofty brick wall, on the outside of which there are handsome apartments for the marshal or keeper. The building contains a chapel, and about 220 rooms, which are very small, and have one bed in each. This prison is a place of confinement for debtors, and those sentenced to imprisonment by the Court of Queen's Bench. Since the demolition of the Fleet Prison, it has been also used as a place of confinement for those who were formerly imprisoned there. In Horsemonger Lane, leading from Blackman Street, is the Surrey County Gaol, a massive building of brick, surrounded by a lofty wall. An erection at the top of the northern lodge is used as the place of execution. Adjoining it is the sessions-house.

ST. GEORGE'S FIELDS, &c.

In the Borough Road stands the British and Foreign School Society, a fine institution, established for the education of the children of members of Dissenting congregations.

Trinity Church, Newington Butts, is a spacious and cruciform edifice, erected in 1823, from designs by Mr. Bedford; it is ornamented with a portico, consisting of six fluted Corinthian columns, above which is a square belfry, surmounted by an octagonal tower. There is a statue of King Alfred in front of the church. St. Mary's, Newington Butts, was the burial-place of the learned Bishop Horsley.

In St. George's Fields, in the parish of Lambeth, stands Bethlehem Hospital, commonly known as Bedlam. It derived its name from having originally been the hospital of St. Mary of Bethlehem, and was incorporated by Henry VIII. for the reception of lunatics. The ancient hospital, erected in 1675, on the east of Moorfields, was pulled down in 1814. The present edifice was commenced in 1812, and completed in 1815, from designs by Mr. Lewis, at a cost of about £100,000: a portion of it occupies the site of the famous Dog and Duck Tavern. It has a magnificent façade, consisting of a centre and two wings, the centre being surmounted by a dome, and ornamented with an Ionic portico of six columns, above which are the arms of Great Britain. The length of the façade alone is 580 feet, and the edifice is three stories high: new buildings have also been recently added, which will accommodate 166 patients, in addition to the 200, for whom there is room in the body of the building.

Opposite to this hospital there has recently been erected a fine cathedral for the Roman Catholics: it is a noble edifice, handsomely fitted up in the interior, but the tower is as yet incomplete.

Near this there is a school for the Indigent Blind. It is a fine building, with a handsome Gothic screen. The institution, which commenced about the year 1799, was established to instruct the indigent blind in trades, by which they might wholly, or in part, gain their own subsistence, and in this object it has been eminently successful.

On the other side of the Roman Catholic Cathedral stands the Asylum, or house of refuge, for female orphan children. This edifice was rebuilt in 1825, and now forms three sides of a quadrangle, with a neat chapel in the centre, in which collections are made for the children every Sunday. This useful institution owes its origin chiefly to the recommendation of Sir John Fielding.

Near the Walworth Road are the Surrey Zoological Gardens, which originated in the animals that were removed here on the demolition of Exeter Change. The gardens are beautifully laid out, and contain a large piece of water, a handsome suspension bridge, and elegantly constructed houses of different forms, in which the animals are lodged. Every summer there is a large painting exhibited, being a view of some town or celebrated place; during the evening, singing and dancing take place, and the whole entertainment concludes with a grand display of fireworks.

BLACKFRIARS ROAD, &c.

At the southern extremity of the Blackfriars Bridge Road stands an obelisk, indicating the junction of the roads from the bridges of Westminster, Waterloo, London, and Blackfriars. At a short distance is the Surrey Theatre, which, when first built, was appropriated to equestrian performances, but after being burnt down in 1805, it was rebuilt in an extremely commodious and elegant manner.

Beyond it is the Magdalene, a most beneficial institution, established in 1758, chiefly by the exertions of the unfortunate Dr. Dodd, with the object of reclaiming abandoned females from prostitution. Since its institution, it has been the means of restoring upwards of 5,000 unfortunate women to their families and friends, as every female whose conduct has been satisfactory, is provided for before leaving the house. There is accommodation here for 80 females in the building, which also contains a chapel open to the public on a Sunday, when a collection is made on entrance. Those persons who wish to benefit by the institution, apply on the first Thursday of every month, when a certain number are admitted without recommendation.

WATERLOO ROAD, &c.

The Blackfriars' Road is connected, by Stamford Street, with the Waterloo Bridge Road, in which stands the Church of St. John the Evangelist, erected in 1823, from designs by Mr. Bedford. It is a large edifice of brick and stone, surmounted by a handsome steeple, and ornamented with a portion, consisting of six Doric columns. Near the bridge there is a shot manufactory, known as one of the marks in London, which has a tower nearly 100 feet in height.

The Victoria Theatre, also in this Road, was erected in 1816, the first stone having been laid by Alderman Goodbehere, as proxy for the Prince and Princess of Saxe Coburg. It is of an oblong form, and has an extensive stage. The performances consist of melodramas, farces, and burlettas.

This road is connected with the Hungerford Suspension Bridge and the Westminster Bridge Road by the York Road, in which is situated a handsome building, erected in 1828, for the General Lying-in-Hospital, an institution which was established in 1765, for the wives of poor tradesmen and mechanics.

WESTMINSTER ROAD, &c.

Astley's Royal Amphitheatre, in the Westminster Road, was first established in 1767 as a riding-school, but was afterwards formed into a theatre for equestrian performances. It was burnt down in 1794, and again in 1803, when it was rebuilt, and became the property of the famous Ducrow. It was, however, again destroyed by fire in 1841, but was immediately rebuilt in a more handsome and commodious style. It is now the property of Mr. Betty, and is entirely appropriated to equestrian performances, melodramas, and pantomimes, in which the first feats in the world have been exhibited.

COMMERCE OF THE METROPOLIS.

The chief circumstance which has raised England to her present important position in the world, is her vast trade and commerce, of which London possesses a very considerable share. It was at a very early period that London commenced to be of commercial importance, for Tacitus speaks of it as the nobile emporium of his time. Bede calls it an emporium for many nations repairing to it by land and sea. Fitz-Stephen, in the reign of Henry II., says that no city in the world exports its merchandises to such a distance as London. Edward I., in 1296, first incorporated the Company of Merchant Adventurers, and the privileges of the Hanse Merchants were much extended about the same period. In 1504 these privileges were confirmed by statute, and all previous acts against them were repealed.

A company was soon after formed for the purpose of prosecuting discoveries under the direction of Sebastian Cabot, a Bristol merchant; and one of the ships belonging to this company having accidentally arrived at the bay of St. Nicholas, landed at Archangel, and obtained peculiar privileges of trade from the Czar of Russia. Mary incorporated these Russia or Muscovy merchants, and their charter was confirmed in the eighth year of Elizabeth's reign. This queen also obtained for the English the exclusive grant of the foreign commerce of that vast empire. It was not, indeed, until this period that England began to derive any benefit from her own commercial advantages. Settlements were then planned in America, particularly in Virginia. Discoveries were every day being made of new countries, shipping increased, and for the first time the sea was considered the wealthy element of prosperity, and naval dominion was looked upon as the most desirable thing that the nation could attain. Multitudes now flocked to London from Flanders, in consequence of the disturbances in that country, bringing with them their families and their wealth. The Royal Exchange was now erected by Sir Thomas Gresham. The Levant or Turkey Company, and also the Eastland Company, were established in 1579; and on the 31st December, 1600, Elizabeth granted the first patent to the East India Company. Their first adventure was successful, and they have now risen to be one of the greatest mercantile associations in the world.

The society of Spanish Merchants was incorporated, and assurance and insurance companies were established. At that time we were provided with all metals from Germany; wine, paper, linen, &c., were furnished from France; sugars from Portugal; all kinds of American produce came from Spain, and East India commodities from Venetia and Genoa. Charters were then granted to corporations or bodies of men, giving them an exclusive right of trading to various parts; such as the Hudson's Bay Company, the Turkey Company, the Royal African Company, &c., most of which countries are now laid open, and the patents granted by Elizabeth annulled.

Under James I. the foreign trade greatly increased, and the tonnage and number of ships in the port of London was considerably augmented. Rapid progress was also made during the commencement of the reign of Charles I., as may be estimated by the amount of ship-money imposed on the capital by that monarch, which amounted to £14,000, that being the cost of two ships of 1,120 tons, and 448 men.

Prices current now began to be issued, and in 1635 an order was issued by the king in council to the postmaster of England for foreign parts, requiring him to open a communication between the metropolis and Edinburgh, Dublin, and other places. Hitherto merchants had been accustomed to deposit their money in the Tower mint, but in 1640 the king thought proper to raise a sum of money by a forced loan, and thus the deposit lost its credit, and the merchants were forced to trust their money to their apprentices and clerks. Robberies were frequent, and it was necessary to find a remedy. Merchants then lodged their money in the hands of the goldsmiths, whom they commissioned to receive and pay for them; and this was the origin of the practice of banking, for goldsmiths soon allowed a regular interest for the money deposited with them, and in a short time commenced to discount merchants' bills, at an interest superior to that which they paid.

The celebrated navigation act was passed in 1651; and in the same year coffee was introduced to London by one Edwards, a Turkey merchant. The sugar trade then also became established, and upwards of 20,000 cloths were sent annually to Turkey. During the three years subsequent to 1665, when the Great Plague was raging, scarcely a foreign vessel entered the port of London, and the Great Fire, which soon after happened, was a serious check upon commercial enterprise. Trade, however, shortly revived, and in the course of a few years was in as prosperous a condition as ever.

In 1670, India muslins were first worn, and the Hudson's Bay Company was then established. The Greenland Fishing Company was incorporated in 1693, and the following year was memorable for the institution of the Bank of England. The commerce of the East Indies having increased considerably, a new joint stock company was established in 1698, but it was shortly afterwards incorporated with the old one by Queen Anne, under the title of "The United Company of Merchants trading to the East Indies."

Commerce now increased with great rapidity, until 1710, from which time, however, until 1748, it made comparatively slow progress, owing to the South Sea scheme, the Scotch rebellion, and the Spanish war. It began again to flourish, but met with a new check by the breaking out of the American war, but after the peace it revived and rapidly increased; for in 1784 the exportation to America alone amounted to £23,397,500, much more than it had been for many years before the war. The amount of duties levied in the port of London was then £4,472,091. In 1796 the exports of London amounted in value to £18,410,499, and the imports to £14,719,466. The number of British ships that entered the port was 2,007, carrying 436,843 tons; and 2,169 foreign vessels, carrying 287,142 tons. The following year was remarkable for a panic which took place when the Bank discontinued payment in specie, but confidence was soon restored. In 1799 the revenue of the customs amounted to £7,226,353, an astonishing increase upon the amount they produced when Queen Elizabeth commenced her government, at which time they amounted to only £36,000.

The value of the imports and of the exports of the port, in 1800, amounted to £68,000,000, nearly two-thirds of the trade of the whole kingdom; 2,666 vessels belonged to the port in that year, carrying 568,268 tons, and 41,402 men, showing an increase on the beginning of the last century of six to one on the tonnage, and four to one on the amount of men and ships. The value of the imports and exports of London, in 1829, had increased to £107,772,805. In 1837, the number of vessels that entered the port was 17,603, carrying 3,132,367 tons, and the number that cleared outwards was 14,654, carrying 2,495,517 tons; this is exclusive of vessels in ballast, and those in the Irish and English trade, of which there were 9,820 inwards, and 14,725 outwards. In 1839, the amount of customs duty received at the port of London was £11,431,245, being nearly three times the amount of that produced at Liverpool, and eleven times that produced at Bristol.

Since the beginning of the century, several changes have taken place in the commercial intercourse of England: the slave trade has been abolished; the trade with the East Indies and China thrown open; the colonies of South Australia and New Zealand established; facilities of intercourse afforded to all parts of the globe by steam; the overland route to India discovered; and the navigation laws repealed.

THE PORT OF LONDON.

The port, meaning that part occupied by shipping, extends from London Bridge to Deptford, a distance of about four miles, the average breadth being from four to five hundred yards. It may be divided into four parts—the upper, middle, and lower Pools, and the space between Limehouse and Deptford. The upper Pool extends from London Bridge to Union Hole, a distance of about 1,600 yards; the middle Pool from thence to Wapping New Stairs, 700 yards; the lower Pool from thence to the Horseferry-tier, near Limehouse, 1,800 yards; and the space below to Deptford is about 2,700 yards. The legal quays, which were appointed in 1558, and the sufferance quays, occupy the whole of the north bank of the river, with little interruption, from London Bridge to the western extremity of Tower ditch, forming a frontage of about 1,464 feet.

This however, being quite insufficient for the purposes of accommodation for the commerce of London, a plan was projected in 1793 for the construction of wet docks in Wapping, in the Isle of Dogs, and at Rotherhithe. Mr. Daniel Alexander, by direction of a committee, accordingly made a survey, and prepared plans and estimates for forming docks at Wapping, and a canal leading from that part of Blackwall where the present East India docks have been constructed, and along a line where the West India docks have been formed. A meeting of merchants took place on December 22, 1795, when the plans met with unanimous approval; and within a few hours a subscription of £800,000 was filled up for carrying them into execution, and the preparations for their construction were commenced.

The West India Docks are situated across the Isle of Dogs, at a part where it is extremely narrow; and as the isle is formed by the circuitous course of the river, which leaves it almost a peninsula, the docks communicate on one side with Blackwall, and on the other side with Limehouse. These docks were constructed by the subscriptions of private persons, who are repaid with interest not to exceed 10 per cent. This is produced by a rate or charge upon all the shipping and merchandise which enters the dock, and the dividend has always hitherto been paid by the Company. In 1799 an act was passed, by which all West India produce was required to be unloaded in these docks: the present capital of the Company is £1,100,000. There are two docks—the northern one, which extends over thirty acres, is appropriated to the unloading of the ships from the West Indies, and has accommodation for 300 West Indiamen; and the southern one, which covers twenty-four acres, and contains accommodation for upwards of 200 West Indiamen, is appropriated to the loading of outward-bound ships. Both these docks are enclosed by walls five feet in thickness, and are surrounded by extensive and commodious warehouses. The first dock was commenced in February, 1800, and completed in August, 1802; it is surrounded by extensive warehouses, in which the goods are lodged until the duty is paid; the second dock was opened in 1805. A canal was cut to the south of the West India Docks, to enable ships to avoid the circuitous navigation of the Isle of Dogs, but was sold to the Dock Company by the city in 1829.

The London Docks, between Ratcliffe highway and the Thames, were constructed by subscription in the same manner as the West India Docks. They were commenced in June, 1802, and in 1805 St. George's Dock was opened; this dock extends over twenty acres, and has accommodation for 500 vessels; adjoining it is a basin for the reception of small craft. To the east of this dock, and communicating with it, there is another dock of fourteen acres. These docks are also surrounded by large warehouses. The Company have a capital of £2,200,000: their docks are used for the general traffic of the port; their tobacco warehouse alone covers four acres, and they receive £15,600 per annum from the government as rent for it.

The business is under the direction of twenty-four directors elected from the proprietors, together with the Lord Mayor of London for the time being.

The West India Docks having proved so advantageous, the proprietors of East India shipping in 1803 succeeded in carrying a bill through parliament for the construction of docks for the better security and accommodation of the East India vessels. A subscription was opened, and £300,000 having been contributed, the directors purchased the Brunswick Dock at Blackwall, which had been constructed by Mr. Perry out of his own fortune. This dock was appropriated to the loading of outward-bound shipping, and a larger dock of eighteen acres was opened in 1806, for the purpose of unloading the homeward-bound ships; it has a commodious basin, with embrasures attached to it. All East India produce coming to this port must be unloaded in these docks. The management is carried on by thirteen directors of the East India Company.

The St. Catherine's Docks are situated on the site of St. Catherine's Hospital, between the London Docks and the Tower. The money for their construction was raised by shares, and the expense, including the purchase of 1,250 houses, which were cleared away, amounted to £2,000,000. They were commenced in 1827, and completed by October, 1828; the designs were by Mr. Telford, and the builder was Mr. Hardwicke. They comprise an area of twenty-four acres, of which eleven and a half are devoted to wet docks, and the remainder to the warehouses and quays. There is a canal communicating with the river, 190 feet in length, and 45 in width, which can be filled or emptied by means of a steam-engine of 100 horse power, so that vessels of 700 tons may be carried into the docks at any time of the tide. These docks are also enclosed with walls.

As it was desirable to form an easy communication between these newly-constructed docks and the city of London, the Commercial Road was constructed for that purpose. It is 70 feet wide, and has in the centre a strong pavement 20 feet in width; thirteen trustees have the management of it, and they were empowered to raise £120,000 for its construction. The distance from the Royal Exchange in London to the West India Dock gate is three miles, and to the East India Dock gate three miles and a half. The Pool is that portion of the Thames in which colliers are permitted to anchor, and extends from the custom-house to Botany Bay tier, near the Regent's Canal, and about 190 or 200 vessels are generally moored in it. The vessels are consigned to factors, by whom the produce is sold to the merchants, the expense of the meterage, 3d. per ton, being shared between them.

The Bermondsey Collier Dock was constructed in order to relieve the river from an obstruction to navigation, formed by the number of small craft formerly moored along its banks. The metropolis is connected with the inland parts of the country by means of the following canals:—The Paddington Canal, which was opened in 1800, leads from Paddington, and joins the Grand Junction Canal; from Paddington it extends nearly 100 miles, to the Oxford Canal at Branson, in Northamptonshire, by which it is connected with other canals, and forms a line of communication to Lancashire and Yorkshire; another branch of it falls into the Thames at Brentford. The Regent's Canal was opened in August, 1820, and connects the Paddington Grand Junction with the Thames on the east of the city, passing the northern suburbs, and having wharves, &c., at Paddington, Battle Bridge, the City Road, and other places. It branches from the Grand Junction at Paddington, and passing under Maida Hill, runs through the Regent's Park and St. Pancras to Islington, where it flows through a tunnel about three quarters of a mile long, beneath the bed of the New River, to the City Road, and proceeds by Hackney and Mile-end to Limehouse. This canal is nine miles long, and has 12 locks and 37 bridges; it was executed under the superintendence of Mr. Nash. On the Surrey side of the river is the Grand Surrey Canal, which passes through the south-eastern suburbs from Camberwell, joining the Thames at the lower extremity of Rotherhithe.

THE MANUFACTURES OF THE METROPOLIS.

The manufactures carried on in London are varied and extensive, and some of them have existed from a very early period. The Skinners were opulent citizens as far back as 1327, manufacturing sables, lucerna, and other rich furs. Cloth-working was also carried on to a very considerable extent. A manufactory of fine glass was established in Crutched Friars in 1556, and at the same period the flint-glass manufacture was carried on in the Savoy. About 1560, an apprentice having seen a pair of knit stockings from Mantua, at the house of an Italian, made another pair like them, which he presented to William, Earl of Pembroke, and thus was introduced the manufacture of knit stockings to this country. Soon afterwards, Thomas Matthews of Fleet Street commenced a manufacture of knives, which has since flourished here. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, silk stockings were first introduced. In 1564 coaches were first made, and within twenty years became extensively manufactured. Soon after, the manufacture of pins, and subsequently that of needles, was introduced. About the tenth year of the reign of Elizabeth, one Richard Dyer brought from Spain the art of making earthen furnaces, earthen fire-pots, and earthen ovens, transportable. Pocket watches having been brought from Nuremberg, in Germany, in 1577, that manufacture was immediately established. London supplied not only England, but the whole Continent, with saltpetre, in the reign of Charles I., by which time there were extensive manufactures of silk, as well as of various articles in silver. In 1676 the printing of calicoes commenced, and looms were brought from Holland.

In 1685, numbers of industrious Frenchmen, having been driven from their country by the revocation of the edict of Nantes, flocked to London, settled in Spitalfields, and introduced several manufactures, besides effecting a great improvement in that of silk. The wholesale trade of London is chiefly carried on in the city and near the river, in the spacious warehouses and commodious counting-houses; while the retail trade is scattered through the streets, all of which contain handsome shops, provided, some with the necessaries, and others with the luxuries of life. A regular intercourse is kept up between this city and all other parts of the island, by means of railroads, waggons, barges, &c.

THE MARKETS.

The metropolis is well supplied with provisions, not only by the shops, of which there are numbers of all kinds, but the markets, which are scattered about in different parts of the metropolis.

Smithfield is the principal market for the sale of bullocks, sheep, lambs, calves, and hogs, which takes place every Monday and Friday. The average number of oxen sold annually at Smithfield is 157,750; of sheep and lambs, 1,500,000; of calves, 21,000; of pigs, 60,000: the value of the whole is estimated at £10,000,000. Leadenhall Market, and Newgate Market, are the greatest for the sale of country-killed meat, and also for pigs and poultry, fresh butter, eggs, &c. Leadenhall Market, and the New Market at Bermondsey, are the only ones for the sale of skins and leather. The market for hay is at Cumberland Market, Regent's Park. Farringdon or Fleet Market is for the sale of butcher's meat, fruit, and vegetables; and Covent Garden Market is for fruit, flowers, and vegetables. Billingsgate is the principal fish market, and was the only one until the establishment of Hungerford Market, where fish, butcher's meat, poultry, eggs, and butter, fruit and vegetables, are sold.

The Corn Market, in Mark Lane, is held every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; but Monday is the principal day. The metropolis is supplied with hay and straw by markets held at Whitechapel, Smithfield, the New Haymarket, Paddington, and Southwark.

There are other markets in various parts of the metropolis, such as Newport Market, for butcher's meat; Borough Market, for butcher's meat and vegetables; Borough Haymarket; Portman Market, Edgeware Road; Hop Market; Clare Market; Clarence Market; Cumberland Market; Fitzroy Market; Grosvenor Market; Hoxton Market; James's Market; Lumber Court, for fish; Mortimer Market, Tottenham Court Road; Oxford Market; Red Lion Market; St. Luke's; St. George's Market; Shadwell Market; Spitalfields Market, &c.

In the vicinity of the metropolis there are a large number of kitchen gardens, which are all together estimated to extend over 10,000 acres, the average produce of which is supposed to amount annually to about £200 per acre. Besides these, there are fruit gardens, supposed to occupy about 3,000 acres, which furnish constant employment to about 12 persons per acre, which number is increased to about 40 during the fruit season. The nursery grounds, which contain every variety of choice fruit trees, ornamental shrubs, and flowers brought to a high degree of perfection, occupy about 1,500 acres; and yet, with this immense provision for the supply, the suburbs are very indifferently furnished with fruits and vegetables.

THE MUNICIPALITY, &c.

The municipal history of the city of London commences from the charter granted by William

I. in confirmation of the former privileges of the city, as stated in the general history of the metropolis. London, in consequence of a variety of charters granted to it by different sovereigns, in order to secure its fidelity in times of disturbance, at last became possessed of a corporation, consisting of a lord mayor, two sheriffs for London and Middlesex, aldermen, common councilmen, and livery. On the accession of William I., the chief officer was called the port-reeve, or port-grave, from Saxon words, signifying chief governor of a harbour; he was then styled provost, but under Henry II. the Norman title of maire was introduced, and soon Anglified into mayor.

Edward III., in 1354, granted to the city the privilege of having gold or silver maces carried before the mayor, sheriffs, and aldermen in the city, the suburbs, and liberties throughout Middlesex; and also beyond the county, when going to meet the king, his heirs, or other royal personages: the chief magistrate was then first called Lord, and styled Right Honourable. Henry III., in 1233, granted a charter, allowing a mayor to be chosen annually, and continued from year to year, if the electors should think proper; he was, however, to be presented to the king for approval; but by a new charter, the presentation was permitted to be made to the barons of the Exchequer, to save the expense of repairing to wherever the king might be.

The election at first took place in an assembly of the citizens, at a large meeting called the folk-mote, but in consequence of the disturbances to which this gave rise, delegates were chosen from each ward, and called the commonalty. These managed the election up to 1475, when an act of the commonalty, or common council, vested the election of the mayor and sheriffs in the mayor, aldermen, and common councilmen, and in the masters, wardens, and liverymen of the city companies. This mode of election was afterwards confirmed by act of parliament, and still continues.

The supremacy of the lord mayor does not cease on the death of the sovereign, but on such an occasion he is considered the principal officer in the kingdom, and so takes his place in the privy council until the proclamation of the new king. The lord mayor is the representative of the king in the civil government of the city; he is also first commissioner of the lieutenancy, perpetual coroner and escheator within the city and liberties of London and the borough of Southwark, chief justice of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery of Newgate, judge of the court of wardmote at the election of aldermen, conservator of the rivers Thames and Medway, perpetual commissioner in all affairs relating to the river Lea, and chief butler to the king at all coronations, having for that service a fee of a golden cup and cover, and a golden ewer. His sanction is necessary for the validity of all corporation business. The election takes place on the 29th September, when the livery in Guildhall choose two of the senior aldermen below the bar, and present them to the court of mayor and aldermen, who select one of the aldermen, who is then declared lord mayor elect. He enters office on the 9th of November, on which day the aldermen and sheriffs attend him to Guildhall in their coaches, from whence they proceed about noon to London Bridge, where the lord mayor elect, the aldermen, recorder, and sheriffs, embark on the magnificent city barge, and, followed by the city companies in their several barges, proceed in state to Westminster, where certain ceremonies are gone through, and his lordship takes the prescribed oaths before the barons of the Exchequer. He then proceeds to the other courts of law, invites the judges to dinner, and returns by water to Blackfriars Bridge. His lordship then goes in procession to the Guildhall, where the day concludes with a magnificent entertainment, followed by a grand ball, at which all the principal personages in the kingdom are present. The costume of the lord mayor is very costly. The salary of the office is £8,000, but the expenditure frequently exceeds that sum by several thousands.

The office of alderman is of Saxon institution, and the name itself is derived from the Saxon eorl-dor-man, a man advanced in years. Henry III. appointed twenty-four citizens to exercise the power, and in the reign of his son the city was divided into twenty-four wards: the aldermen were annually elected till 1394, but Richard II. having removed the courts of judicature from York to London, it was enacted that they should continue to hold office during life or good behaviour. There are now twenty-six wards, each of which has its alderman: they are elected by those freemen who are resident householders; the lord mayor presides at the election, which, if a poll be demanded, lasts for three days: those who have filled the office of mayor are justices of the quorum, and the others are justices of the peace within the city. The names of the wards, with the number of common councilmen returned by each, are as follow:—

Bridge-Ward-Without is unrepresented, except by an alderman.

The common council is a modification of the ancient commonalty which arose from the inconvenience attending the folk-motes, or general assemblies of the citizens, which took place in St. Paul's Churchyard, and which, until the reign of Henry III., was the supreme assembly of the city. At first two representatives were sent from each ward, but, in 1347, the number was enlarged, and each of the twenty-five wards now sends representatives according to its extent.

The name of sheriff is derived from shire-reeve, the governor of a shire or county, and the office was in existence previous to the accession of William I. In general cases, the sheriffs are the officers of the king; but the corporation having purchased the perpetual sheriffwick of Middlesex from Henry I., the lord mayor and citizens now hold it in fee, and appoint two sheriffs annually for London and Middlesex. The jurisdiction of the sheriffs is, in many instances, separate, although, if either die, the other cannot act till a new one be chosen, as there must be two sheriffs for London, which is a city and a county, and they make but one conjointly for Middlesex. They were formerly chosen from the commonalty, but any citizen is eligible, except he swear himself not worth £15,000. The present mode of election is for the lord mayor to drink to fourteen respectable citizens, two of whom are chosen by the livery on the following Midsummer-day, and they are obliged to serve under a penalty of £400; and whoever serves must give bond to the corporation for £1,000. The sheriffs enter upon office on Michaelmas-day, having been sworn at Guildhall the day previously. The day after Michaelmas-day, the sheriffs proceed to Westminster, to be presented to the barons of the Exchequer, and to go through certain ceremonies. The duty of the sheriffs is to serve writs of process, and, when the king is party, they may break open doors or untile roofs to gain admission into houses, but upon private process they can only enter when the door is open, or by stratagem. The sheriffs likewise attend the judges, and execute their orders; impanel juries; see condemned persons executed; and, in cases of riot, rebellion, &c., raise the posse comitatus, or whole body of inhabitants. About 25,000 writs are annually directed to the sheriffs for the county alone.

The recorder is appointed for life by the lord mayor and aldermen, and has a salary of £3,000 per annum. The chamberlain, common-sergeant, city-remembrancer, &c., are also officers belonging to the city.

The name of livery is derived from the ancient usage of the retainers and followers of the lord mayor and sheriffs, wearing dresses of the same form and colour as worn by those officers. The wardens of the companies, in former times, delivered to the lord mayor, on the 1st of December, a purse containing 20s., to obtain, for those who wished it, sufficient cloth to make them a suit.

PECULIAR PRIVILEGES OF THE CITY.

The city possesses several valuable privileges, one of the most important of which is the judicial franchise. There are the lord mayor's court, the court of hustings, the sheriff's court, &c.

Attached to the city, there are ninety-one guilds or companies, of which the following twelve are the principal; the chief officers of them are sometimes styled right honourable:—the Mercers, Grocers, Drapers, Fishmongers, Goldsmiths, Skinners, Merchant Tailors, Haberdashers, Salters, Ironmongers, Vintners, and Clothworkers. About fifty of these companies have halls in different parts of London, the most remarkable of which will be found in the general description of the public buildings of the metropolis.

Another important privilege of the city is its military government. According to the act of 1794, it has two regiments of militia, raised by ballot, and a regiment of light horse volunteers. The city of London returns four members to parliament, who are elected by the liverymen, and, under a recent act, the £10 householders. The nomination takes place at Guildhall, and, when a poll is demanded, it continues for one day.

METROPOLITAN BOROUGHS.

The seven parliamentary boroughs into which the metropolis is divided, are those of London, Southwark, Lambeth, Westminster, Marylebone, Finsbury, and Tower-hamlets; to which may also be added Greenwich, including Woolwich and Deptford, each of which returns two members to parliament.

WESTMINSTER.

Westminster was anciently known as Thorney Island, because, says Stow, it was a place overgrown with thorns, and environed with waters, and was for several centuries situated at a considerable distance from London, the only communication being by a road running along the site of the Strand. In 1385, it was paved as far as the Savoy, and the pavement was afterwards continued as far as Ivy Bridge by Sir Robert Cecil. There is not much doubt that there was a bridge across the Thames in 994. The royal palace that stood here was founded by Edward the Confessor; but the origin of the city of Westminster may be derived from the foundation of the Abbey, to which, in 1257, Henry III. granted the privilege of a market and fair.

In 1352, Westminster, by act of parliament, was constituted one of the ten towns in England where the wool-staple or market should perpetually be held. At the dissolution, Westminster was converted into a bishopric, and had a dean and twelve prebendaries; but on the translation of Thomas Thirlby, who was the only bishop, to Norwich, the bishopric was suppressed.

After this time, Westminster continued to increase, in consequence of being the seat of the court and the legislature. The city is comprised in the parishes of St. Margaret and St. John, and the liberties consist of seven parishes—St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, St. James's, St. Anne's, St. Clement Danes, St. Mary-le-Strand, St. George's, Hanover Square, and St. Paul's, Covent Garden, with the precinct of the Savoy. St. Martin's-le-Grand is also a part of the liberties of Westminster, although situated in London. A college anciently stood there, consisting of a dean and priests, the advowson of which was conveyed by Henry VII. to the Abbey of Westminster. Henry VIII. granted it to the see which he had created, and afterwards to the dean and chapter. When Edward VI. dissolved the bishopric, he granted St. Martin's-le-Grand, with the jurisdiction, to the Bishop of London; but it was afterwards restored, by act of parliament, to the dean and chapter, who still continue in possession of it. The church was destroyed soon after 1548. The inhabitant householders of St. Martin's-le-Grand have the right of voting for the members for Westminster.

The government of Westminster was in the hands of the abbot and monks until the Reformation, after which it was vested in the bishop and the dean and chapter; but at length it was finally settled, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by the government being given to the laity, reserving to the dean the right of nominating the chief officers.

The jurisdiction extends to some towns in Essex. The chief officer is the high-steward, who generally holds office for life; he is chosen by the dean and chapter, and is usually a nobleman. The next officer is the high-bailiff, who is nominated by the high-steward, and has to pay a considerable sum for his appointment. This office is also held for life, and to it belongs the management of the election of members of parliament: all other bailiffs are subordinate to this officer; he summons juries, and to him belong all fines and forfeitures. Besides these, there are sixteen burgesses and their assistants, whose functions are the same as those of the aldermen's deputies in the city, each one being placed at the head of a ward. From these are chosen two head burgesses—one for the city, and one for the liberties. There is also a high-constable, chosen by a court-leet, who has all the other constables under him.

Westminster returns two members to parliament, the election taking place before St. Paul's church, in Covent Garden; if a poll is demanded, the election continues two days, exclusive of the day of nomination. Under the Reform Bill, two members each are returned for Marylebone and Lambeth, each of which have separate polling-places.

SOUTHWARK.

The borough of Southwark possessed a distinct government, being under its own bailiffs, until the year 1327, when great inconvenience being found to arise from malefactors escaping thither to be out of the jurisdiction of the city magistrates, a grant was made of the town, and the mayor of London was made bailiff of Southwark, and empowered to govern it by a deputy. Under Edward VI. the city purchased the borough or town of Southwark from the crown, and one month afterwards, for a further sum of money, Southwark was constituted a ward, by the title of Bridge-Ward-Without. The government is thus vested in the lord mayor, who has under him a steward and bailiff, the former of whom holds a court of record, at St. Margaret's Hill, every Monday, for all debts, damages, and trespasses, within his limits. This borough returns two members to parliament, whose election takes place in front of the Town-hall; and, if a poll be demanded, continues for two days.

CITY POLICE.

The city of London is now watched by police constables, regulated in the same manner as the Metropolitan police, from whom they are distinguished by having arms of the city embroidered upon their coat collars. There are two police-offices in the city—one in the Mansion House, where the lord mayor presides, and to which all cases that occur east of King Street are taken; and the other at the Guildhall, presided over by one of the aldermen in rotation, and to which all cases occurring west of King Street are taken. There are also police-offices in Bow Street, Great Marlborough Street, Lower Pentonville, Worship Street, Shoreditch, Lambeth Street, Whitechapel, High Street, Marylebone, Queen Square, Westminster, and Union Street, Southwark. There is also the Thames Police-office, Wapping, to which are taken all cases from the river, which is guarded by a regular police, who keep watch both by day and night. The magistrates in these offices dispose of many of the cases in a summary way, and their duty also extends to persons brought up for examination on charges of treason, murder, and every kind of felony, fraud, and misdemeanour. Each of the offices has two magistrates, who attend by rotation, two clerks and other officers, and from ten to twelve constables. The three principal stations of the Thames police are at Somerset House, Wapping, and Blackwall, but boats are plying between these stations the whole night. The principal police-office is that of Bow Street.

THE LONDON PRESS.

In the metropolis there are published a large number of periodicals, adapted for all classes of society. Some of these appear quarterly, some monthly, others weekly, and are sold at various prices, from one penny upwards. To enumerate even the principal of them would be impossible, and no statement would long continue accurate, as there are new ones springing up, and others being put a stop to every day.

Besides these publications, there are numbers of newspapers published daily, some in the morning, some in the evening; some are published weekly, and others two or three times a week. The first newspaper published in England appeared in 1558, and was called The English Mercurie; it was sent out at the time the Spanish Armada was approaching our country. It was not till after the Revolution of 1688 that the Freedom of the Press was established, by the refusal of the parliament to continue the restrictions that had before been imposed upon it. The stamp duties upon advertisements in newspapers were lowered in 1833 from 3s. 6d. to 1s. 6d., and in 1837 the paper stamp was reduced from 4d. to 1d. The number of stamps used in one year is upwards of 30,000,000. The number of copies of morning journals daily circulated is about 33,000, of evening journals about 14,000, and of weekly newspapers more than 150,000. The number of copies of newspapers weekly printed in Great Britain is from 54 to 55,000,000. To speak here of the consummate ability with which the papers are conducted, would be nothing less than sheer impertinence, and it may therefore suffice to say, that they exhibit the greatest combination of intellect and mechanical appliance that has ever been exhibited, and that the great men who, through their columns, give the tone to that mighty agent, public opinion, reflect in the most lucid character the history of their age.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS, &c.

Besides the charitable institutions mentioned in the course of the foregoing description, London contains several other hospitals, educational charities, asylums, dispensaries, &c.; and it is calculated that the annual sum expended in public charities in this city amounts to upwards of £1,000,000. Foremost among these institutions, as providing for the highest requisite of humanity, mental instruction, is the London University. This important institution was incorporated in 1837, with a chancellor, vice-chancellor, and 36 fellows, empowered to confer degrees in arts, law, and medicine. It is chiefly supported by government grants. Government has granted to the following institutions the privilege of sending students to this university to graduate: the same privilege has been granted to other colleges situated in different parts of the empire. Those to which the privilege has already been granted, or which have applied for it, besides the two metropolitan ones, are Bristol college; Oscot, Stonyhurst, and Ushaw colleges (Roman Catholic); Durham university; St. Cuthbert's college, near Durham; Manchester college (formerly York, Unitarian); and Homerton college, High-bury college, and Spring Hill college, Birmingham, connected with the Congregationalists. From the last three colleges not less than 9 students went up to the matriculation, in October, 1840. Of the above colleges, University college, London, appears to take the lead. The estimated expense of conducting the university for the year ending 31st March, 1841, was £5,723. 10s.

University College.—This educational establishment was founded by subscription in 1825; it has since received various endowments. The edifice is situated in the northern environs; it is classical and elegant. There are well-arranged lecture and apparatus rooms, a spacious library, and an anatomical theatre. Pupils in law, medical studies, general science, classics, and modern languages, are received. This institution is chiefly supported by donations.

King's College.—This establishment was founded subsequently to the preceding rival institution, and in a similar way. It is patronised by the dignitaries of the church, &c. The edifice adjoins Somerset-house, forming one of its wings fronting the river: it was opened in 1831. The course of education is similar to that of the preceding, only instruction in the Christian religion, and daily worship, are added.

College of Physicians.—This college was established in 1523. The college buildings are situated in Pall Mall East: they contain a small but neat theatre, a library, reading room, &c. The college is constituted by a president, elects, and fellows, who license all physicians to practise within the bills of mortality, and grant extra licenses to others to practise in the rest of the empire. The fellows can only be appointed from such as have graduated at Oxford or Cambridge.

College of Surgeons.—The Royal College of Surgeons was originally incorporated with the barbers, in 1461, as one of the old city guilds or companies, by the name of the Company of Barbers, then the only practitioners in surgery. The surgeons were prohibited by Henry VIII. from shaving, and the shavers from practising surgery, except in drawing teeth. The college buildings are situated in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, in which is a spacious and elegant museum, containing John Hunter's invaluable and celebrated preparations. Without the examination of this college, no person can practise surgery in London or Westminster, or in a circuit of seven miles round the hall: they examine medical officers for the navy and army, and for the East India service.

Veterinary College.—This institution was established at Camden-town in 1791. It is under the superintendence of a president and 24 directors, and there is a professor who teaches about 30 pupils the principles and practice of farriery, by lectures, dissections, &c. An infirmary for horses has also been established. The buildings connected with this institution are extensive and appropriate.

St. Peter's College.—The college of St. Peter's, Westminster, may here also be noticed, though it is little else than a school for boys, and will afterwards be enumerated as such.

Sion College.—This is more particularly a religious and charitable than an educational institution. It is composed of the clergy of London as fellows, with a president, deans, and assistants, and the bishop of London as visitor, and with almshouses for 10 poor men and 10 poor women, endowed by Dr. Thomas White and others. There is also a valuable library for the use of the students of the London clergy. The income of this establishment, in 1835, was £1,162. 7s.

SCHOOLS, &c.

The Charter-house derives its name from the word Chartreuse, being erected upon the site of a convent of Carthusian monks, founded by Sir W. Mauny, in the reign of Edward III., and who, on the dissolution, were treated with great cruelty by Henry VIII. In May, 1611, Mr. Thomas Sutton, a merchant of immense wealth and great liberality, purchased these buildings, with their appurtenances, of the Duke of Norfolk, and completed them, at an expense on the whole of £20,000. He also endowed it with estates to the annual value of about £4,500. The buildings are of great antiquity, the chapel containing an organ gallery, richly ornamented, several monuments, and the tomb of the founder; there is a library, chiefly presented by Mr. Wrayard, and a highly ornamented old court room: the governor's room contains portraits of several eminent men; the hall has a large painted window. The institution comprises an hospital as well as a school, and its establishment consists of a master, a preacher, two schoolmasters, and 44 scholars, who are lodged, have a good education, and are supplied with all the necessaries of life; the students at the universities have £20 per annum each, for eight years: there are nine ecclesiastical preferments in the patronage of the governors. The hospital is for 80 decayed merchants or military officers, each of whom has £14 per annum, besides a gown, provision, fuel, and two handsome apartments: they dine in a common hall, and attend prayers daily.

In Suffolk Lane, Canon Street, stands the Merchant Tailors' School, founded in 1561 by the Company of Merchant Tailors; the present spacious buildings occupy the site of a former house destroyed by the Great Fire; they are supported on the east by stone pillars, forming a cloister, and containing apartments for three ushers. Adjoining the school is the library and chapel, and near these a house for the head-master. The school is conducted by a principal, three under-masters, and two writing-masters; there are about 300 boys, of whom 100 are taught gratis, 50 at 2s. 6d. per quarter, and 100 at 5s. There are certain annual examinations of the scholars, of whom several are sent to the universities, this school having 46 fellowships at St. John's college, Oxford, alone.

The City of London School, in Milk Street, is a handsome Elizabethan building, erected from designs by Mr. Bunning in 1835; it was founded in 1447, and about 500 boys are educated here, at about £8 per annum each. There are also various minor schools in different parts of the metropolis maintained by charity, the parish schools, the Lancasterian and national schools, and upwards of 400 private schools.

OUT-HOSPITALS, &c.

At Hyde Park Corner is situated St. George's Hospital, established in 1733, for the sick and lame; it has recently been handsomely rebuilt from designs by Mr. Wilkins, and the front, which is 200 feet long, is faced with cement to imitate stone. It contains 29 wards and 460 beds, and has a theatre for lectures and a museum.

The London Hospital, in the Whitechapel Road, was established in 1740, and the present spacious building erected in 1759; it was instituted for the relief of sick and wounded seamen, watermen, coalheavers, shipwrights, ropemakers, labourers on the docks, &c.; there is an accumulating fund attached to the hospital, managed by 21 guardians, chosen once in three years.

The Middlesex Hospital is a spacious and commodious edifice, with accommodation for 300 patients, situated in Charles Street, Cavendish Square. It was founded in 1745, for the reception of the sick and lame, the relief of lying-in married women, and the supply of the indigent and laborious with advice, relief, medicine, and lodging; and in 1792 a ward was fitted up for the use of patients afflicted with cancer, who may stay during their life. It is governed by a patron, a president, fourteen vice-presidents, and a committee of the governors, or of those who subscribe three guineas annually, or thirty guineas at one payment.

There are several Lying-in Hospitals, the principal ones being, that in Brownlow Street, Drury Lane, established in 1749; that in Lisson Grove, established in 1752; that in the City Road, instituted in 1750; and those called the Maternity Charity, the Benevolent Institution, the Royal West London Infirmary, the Westminster Lying-in Institution, the Royal British Ladies' Institution, the Ladies' Benevolent Institution, the St. Andrew's Lying-in Charity, the Mother and Infant Friend Society, the Agar Street Benevolent Institution, the Charlotte Street Lying-in Dispensary, the Finsbury Institution, and the Long Acre Chapel Dorcas Society.

The principal hospitals which have not been mentioned are, the North Albion Hospital, Upper Gower Street; Charing Cross Hospital, King William Street; Central Lying-in Charity and Dispensary for Females, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields; Lock Hospital, near Hyde Park Corner; Ophthalmic Infirmary, Moorfields; Ophthalmic Infirmary, King William Street, Strand; Samaritan Society; Free Hospital for the cure of malignant diseases, Hatton Garden; Sea-bathing Infirmary for the Poor; Grey Coat Hospital, Sutton Ground, for the education of poor children; St. John's Hospital, St. John's Square; St. John's British Hospital, Hatton Garden; Royal Universal Infirmary for Children, Waterloo Bridge Road; London Fever Hospital, Pancras Road; Grey Coat Hospital or School, Tothill Fields.

ALMSHOUSES, &c.

There are also numerous excellent and well-endowed almshouses in various parts of the metropolis, the chief of which are, Lady Dacre's Almshouses, Tothill Fields; Aske's Hospital or Haberdashers' Almshouses, Hoxton, rebuilt in a handsome and commodious style in 1826; Licensed Victuallers' Asylum, Old Kent Road, consisting of 101 houses, &c. There are a great number of dispensaries, established to supply the poor with medical assistance, when their absence from employment is not necessary.

Among the chief miscellaneous charities may be mentioned the Royal Humane Society, Chatham Place, established in 1774, for the recovery of persons apparently drowned, and for rewarding those who have saved the lives of other persons from drowning. The society has eighteen receiving-houses in the metropolis, the principal of which is near the Serpentine, in Hyde Park: the Small Debt Relief Society was established in 1772, for the discharge of persons imprisoned for small debts: the Mendicity Society was established in 1818, for the purpose of removing from the streets every description of mendicants: the Philanthropic Society, recently removed to Norwood, founded in 1788, for teaching children who have been engaged in criminal courses, or the children of convicted felons, such trades as may enable them to earn an honest living: and the Prison Discipline Society, in Aldermanbury, was established for the amelioration of jails: the Marine Society, Bishopgate Street, is an institution for qualifying poor boys for the sea service: the African Institution was founded in 1807, for the purpose of instructing and civilising Africa.

St. Catherine's Hospital, originally founded by Matilda, the queen of Stephen, about 1145, stands on the east of Regent's Park, where it was erected when the original edifice was taken down, to make room for the St. Catherine Docks. Several other queens were great benefactors to this hospital, which takes its name, however, from Catherine, the wife of Henry VIII. The building, erected from designs by A. Poynter, Esq., is of brick, in the pointed style. The collegiate church contains an organ with a larger swell than any in England, and also a curious wooden pulpit and stalls.

Besides these charities, there are others too numerous to mention, for the relief of the poor of London, and of natives of Scotland, Ireland, France, Poland, &c., Covent Garden and Drury Lane Theatrical Fund for actors and actresses, Refuge for the Destitute, Seamen's Hospital, &c., &c. Several of the principal charities have valuable libraries attached to them.

LITERARY AND PHILOSOPHICAL INSTITUTIONS.

The number of literary, philosophical, and other learned and scientific institutions, is very great, and is continually increasing, so that there is scarcely any branch of science but what is represented by some society of persons interested in its development. There is the Apothecaries' Society, which holds its meetings in a handsome hall in Water Lane, Blackfriars; the Medical Society, in Bolt Court, Fleet Street; the Veterinary College, Camden Town; the Medical Society, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields; the Linnean Society; Geological Society; and such a variety of others, each of which is devoting its energies to the study of some high branch of science or literature, that no space can be spared even for a bare enumeration of them.

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL COURTS.

By a recent act of parliament, courts are held in various parts of London, for the recovery of small debts not exceeding £50. They are all of them commodious buildings, and are presided over by gentlemen of the bar of acknowledged talent. The prisons of the metropolis which we have not before mentioned, are as follow:—Giltspur Street Prison, to the north of Newgate, was erected to supply the place of the old city prisons called compters; it is used for the reception of vagrants, and persons waiting for examination. The building consists of an extensive pile of rustic stonework. The New Debtors' Prison, Whitecross Street, was erected in 1813, to confine those unfortunate persons who would otherwise have been imprisoned in Newgate. The Tothill Fields Bridewell, Westminster, was rebuilt in 1831, from designs by Mr. Abrahams. The Borough Compter is a prison belonging to the city of London, with a jurisdiction extending over five parishes in Southwark. The New Bridewell Prison, near Bethlehem Hospital, is a commodious building, erected in 1829, as a substitute for the City Bridewell, Blackfriars. There are several houses of correction in different parts of London.

DISSENTING CHAPELS.

London contains numerous places of worship for dissenters of almost every denomination: for the Wesleyan Methodists, Whitefield Methodists, Baptists, Unitarians, Scotch Calvinists, Presbyterians, those of the Scotch Secession, Moravians, Huntingdonians, those of Lady Huntingdon's persuasion, Calvinists, Swedenborgians, Sandemanians, Arians, and Freethinkers; also for the Society of Friends, for Roman Catholics, and for Jews. There are also the following foreign Protestant churches and chapels: French, German, Dutch, Russian, Swiss, Swedish, Danish, and Armenian. The French and Dutch church (for it is used for both), in Austin Friars, is a spacious Gothic building of great antiquity, having been erected in 1351, and has a library attached to it, which contains some curious old MSS., amongst which are some letters of Calvin and others of the old reformers.

MINOR PLACES OF ENTERTAINMENT.

Besides the places of amusement that have been already mentioned, there are several minor theatres and saloons in which dramatic entertainments take place—the Queen's Theatre, in Tottenham Court Road; the City of London Theatre, in Norton Folgate; the City Theatre, in Milton Street; and the Eagle Tavern, in the City Road, are the principal of these. There are also several spacious and elegantly fitted up apartments open during the winter as casinos, in which dancing takes place from an early hour in the evening till eleven o'clock: the chief ones are at the Argyll Rooms, in the Haymarket; the Adelaide Gallery, in the Lowther Arcade, &c. The miscellaneous exhibitions of every kind—panoramas, dioramas, wax-works, &c., &c., in different parts of London, are almost numberless.

DISTINGUISHED NATIVES OF LONDON.

London has given birth to a great number of individuals who have risen to eminence in learning, in the arts and sciences, or by great and noble actions. It was the birth-place of Ingulphus, an English historian, who was born about 1030, and, at the age of twenty-one, became secretary to William, Duke of Normandy. He afterwards made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and became a Benedictine monk. On William's accession to the throne of England, he was made abbot of Croyland, and rebuilt that monastery, for which he obtained many privileges. He wrote its history from 664 to 1091, and died in 1109.

Thomas à Becket, also a native of London, was a man of humble origin, who, having been raised to the archbishopric of Canterbury by Henry II., became proud and insolent, and opposed the policy of his royal master. The king, having uttered some hasty expressions against him, was the cause of his being assassinated by four of his courtiers, at the altar of Canterbury cathedral, in 1170. He was canonized after his death.

Matthew of Westminster was a Benedictine monk, who flourished in the fourteenth century. As an historian he is highly esteemed for his veracity and diligence.

Geoffrey Chaucer, the father of English poetry, was born in 1328, and at first studied law in the Temple, but soon afterwards became successively yeoman and shield-bearer to Edward III., and comptroller of the customs of London. In the following reign he became a follower of Wickliffe, and was imprisoned, but soon afterwards was released on recanting his opinions. He then retired to Woodstock, and composed his treatise on the astrolabe. He married a connexion of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, and died in 1400.

Dr. John Colet was born in 1466, and became dean of St. Paul's. He was a great scholar, and famous for his encouragement of learning, of which his foundation of St. Paul's school is a lasting memorial. He died in 1519.

Sir Thomas More was the son of Sir John More, judge of the King's Bench, and was born in 1480. He was educated at Oxford, and, in 1499, became a student of Lincoln's Inn. At twenty-one he obtained a seat in parliament, and, in 1508, he was made judge of the sheriff's court. In 1518 he published his famous political romance of "Utopia," and soon after, by the interest of Wolsey, obtained the honour of knighthood, and a place in the privy council. In 1520, he was made treasurer of the Exchequer; in 1523, speaker of the House of Commons. In 1530, he succeeded Wolsey as lord chancellor, in which office he was so industrious, that, in a short time, there was not a cause left undetermined. He resigned the seals because he could not support Henry in his divorce with Queen Catherine, and was at last committed to the Tower for refusing the oath of supremacy. He was tried in the King's Bench, found guilty of treason, and sentenced to be beheaded. He was accordingly executed on the 6th July, 1535, demeaning himself on the scaffold with manly fortitude and resignation.

John Leland, the famous antiquary, was born towards the end of the reign of Henry VII. He became chaplain and librarian to Henry VIII., who also appointed him his antiquary, with a commission to examine all the libraries of all the cathedrals, abbeys, and colleges in the kingdom. For six years he travelled, collecting materials for the history and antiquities of England and Wales; but retiring to his house in London, after about two years, he died insane, in 1552, without completing his undertaking.

John Stow, the famous antiquary, was born in Cornhill, about 1525. He was bred a tailor, but soon devoted himself to the study of antiquities. His "Summary of the Chronicles of England," which was his first work, he enlarged in 1600, and published under the title of Flores Historiarum, or Annals of the Kingdom, from the time of the ancient Britons. In 1598 appeared his "Survey of London." He was compelled, in his old age, to solicit charity by means of a brief. His death took place in 1606.

William Camden, the well-known antiquary, was born in 1551, and studied at Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree. He afterwards became second and chief master of Westminster School, and was ultimately appointed to the lucrative post of Clarencieux king-at-arms. Besides his celebrated work, "The Britannia," he wrote "Annals of Queen Elizabeth," a "Greek Grammar," &c. He died in 1623.

Edmund Spenser, one of the greatest poets England has produced, was born about 1553, was educated at Cambridge, and afterwards took up his residence in the north of England. In 1580 he became secretary to Lord Grey de Wilton, viceroy of Ireland, and procured a grant of 3,028 acres in the county of Cork, on which, however, he was obliged to become resident; Sir Walter Raleigh, who visited him here, induced him to write the "Faerie Queen," which was printed in 1590, and presented to Elizabeth, who granted the poet an annual pension of £50. In 1596 he published the second part of his great poem, which, however, was never completed according to the original plan. When Lord Tyrone's rebellion broke out, he was obliged to fly with such haste, that he left behind him his infant son, whom the furious insurgents burnt in the house. Spenser came to England, and died heart-broken, on January 16, 1598-9; he was interred in Westminster Abbey by the Earl of Essex, and a monument was raised to his memory by the Countess of Dorset.

Francis Bacon, the son of the lord-keeper, Sir Nicholas Bacon, was born in 1561: on the accession of James I. he was knighted, and made a king's counsel; he afterwards became solicitor-general, and at last rose to the dignity of Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, Baron Verulam, and Viscount St. Albans; he was, however, accused of corruption in his office, dismissed, and heavily fined. He then retired from public life, and spent the remainder of his days in study, producing those philosophical works which have rendered his name immortal: he died in 1626. Edward Alleyn was a famous actor in the reigns of Elizabeth and James; he was born in 1566, founded Dulwich College, in which he became first master, and died in 1626. Inigo Jones, the famous architect, was born about 1572, and was at first apprenticed to a joiner, but displaying a great taste for drawing, was sent to Italy by the Earl of Pembroke: the study of the works of Palladio at Venice having given him a taste for architecture, he devoted himself to that art, in which he soon became eminent, and was appointed first architect to Christian IV., king of Denmark, with whom he visited England in 1606. He was induced to remain here, became architect to the queen, and in the following reign was lucratively employed in preparing masques, to be shown before the court, and erecting the Banqueting-house at Whitehall, thus realizing a handsome fortune; but on the breaking out of the civil war, he suffered severely as a Roman catholic and a royalist, and at last died on July 21, 1652.

Dr. John Donne was born in 1573, and, though the son of a catholic, embraced the protestant faith, and became secretary to Lord Chancellor Ellesmere: he was imprisoned for having clandestinely married the chancellor's niece, and afterwards took orders, when he became chaplain to King James, and afterwards preacher of Lincoln's Inn, and dean of St. Paul's: he died in 1631. Dr. Johnson characterises him as the founder of the metaphysical school of poetry; and his works comprise, Letters, Sermons, Theological Essays, &c. Benjamin Jonson, a great dramatist, and a friend of Shakspeare, was the posthumous son of a clergyman, and was born in 1574, at Westminster: when his mother married again to a bricklayer, he was taken by his father-in-law from the grammar-school at which he had been placed, to assist in the trade; he soon, however, left home, and served as a private soldier in the army in Flanders, on his return from which he resumed his studies, but was forced, from poverty, to take to the stage. Having killed another actor in a duel, he was imprisoned for some time, but, on his release, married, and commenced writing for the stage. "Every Man in his Humour" was produced in 1598, and followed successively by all his other plays; on the accession of James I. he composed the masques and entertainments for the court, but joining Chapman and Marston in the comedy of "Eastward Ho," a gross libel on the Scotch nation, the three were imprisoned, and had a narrow escape from losing their ears and nose, according to the sentence. In 1617 he was appointed poet laureate, with an annual pension of £100 and a butt of Canary, having besides a pension he enjoyed from the city: he died on the 16th August, 1637, and was interred in Westminster Abbey, where there is a handsome tablet to his memory, inscribed "O rare Ben Jonson!"

John Milton, one of the most illustrious poets that ever lived, was the son of a scrivener, and was born in Bread Street in 1608: having been educated at Cambridge, he settled at Horton, in Buckinghamshire, where he wrote his "Comus," "L'Allegro," "Il Penseroso," and "Lycidas;" he travelled through France and Italy in 1638, and afterwards settled in London, where, on the disturbances commencing between the king and the parliament, he sided with the latter, and wrote several political pamphlets in favour of his view of the question. In 1643 he married the daughter of Richard Powell, Esq., a magistrate of Oxfordshire, but his wife left him, and returned to her parents soon after their marriage; but a reconciliation was subsequently brought about. Milton continued his writings in defence of the republican party, but soon after became deprived of his sight. He subsequently was appointed Latin secretary to Cromwell, and on the Restoration was excepted from the act of indemnity: he obtained his pardon, however, through the interest of Sir William Davenant and others, and soon afterwards lost his second wife, whom he had married during the Commonwealth, but married for the third time. At the time of the plague he removed to Chalfont, in Buckinghamshire, where he completed his "Paradise Lost," for which he received only £15, and that paid by instalments: subsequently he wrote his "Paradise Regained:" his death took place at his house in Bunhill Row, in 1674, and he was buried in the church of St. Giles, Cripplegate; he has also a monument in Westminster Abbey.

Algernon Sidney was the second son of Robert, Earl of Leicester, and was born in 1617, and educated for a military life; he served against the Irish insurgents under his brother Lord Lisle, and on his return, in 1643, joined the parliamentarians; he afterwards became governor of Dover, and was nominated a member of the high court of justice for the trial of the king, which measure he approved of and vindicated, although he did not sign the warrant of execution. He was also hostile to the government of Cromwell, and during the Commonwealth retired to Penshurst, where he composed his famous "Discourse on Government." In 1659 he was sent as a commissioner to mediate between Sweden and Norway: on the Restoration, he remained abroad till 1677; in 1683 he was arrested, with Lord William Russell and others, for being concerned in the Ryehouse Plot, and being tried before the chief justice, Jeffries, was convicted illegally, and unjustly executed on the 7th December, 1678.

Abraham Cowley, the posthumous son of a grocer, was born in 1618, educated at Westminster, and elected a scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, where he produced some of his poetry: he was ejected from the university in 1643, by the puritans, and then became a warm partisan of the royal cause, in serving which he suffered much. Soon after the Restoration, he obtained the lease of a farm at Chertsey, which produced him about £300 per annum, but he did not long enjoy it, for he died in 1667. Sir William Temple, the son of Sir John Temple, master of the rolls and a privy councillor in Ireland, was born in 1628, and studied at Cambridge; he afterwards travelled over the Continent for six years, and in 1665 he went to Munster on a secret mission. Having engaged himself in the formation of the triple alliance between England, Sweden, and Holland, he became resident minister at the Hague, but was recalled in 1669, and retired to Sheen, where he wrote his "Observations on the United Provinces." In 1674, Sir William was again ambassador to the States-General; and in 1679, was appointed secretary of state, but resigning office the next year, he retired to his country seat in Surrey, where he continued till his death, which took place in 1700.

Isaac Barrow, D.D., was an eminent theologian and great mathematician, on both of which subjects he wrote several learned works: Charles II. said of him that he was an unfair preacher, for he exhausted every subject on which he discoursed: he was born in 1630; became vice-chancellor of Cambridge in 1657, and died in 1677. Edmund Halley, the famous astronomer and mathematician, was born in 1656, and educated at St. Paul's school and at Oxford, where, in 1676, he published some observations on the sun, by which the motion of that luminary on its axis is determined; he afterwards went to St. Helena, where he determined the position of 350 stars, and on his return was created master of arts, and chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. He afterwards travelled for the promotion of his favourite science through Europe, when he discovered the great comet, which again appeared in 1835; made two voyages to the Western Ocean; constructed a correct chart of the Channel; journeyed to Dalmatia; in 1703 was appointed Savilian professor of geometry at Oxford; in 1713 became secretary to the Royal Society, and in 1719 succeeded Flamsteed as astronomer-royal, in which office he continued till his death in 1741-2. During his long and useful life, he published many valuable works on astronomy.

Daniel Defoe, whose family name was Foe, was the son of a butcher, and born in 1660. In 1688 he kept a hosier's shop in Cornhill, and in 1695 was made accountant to the commissioners of glass duty, which he continued till the impost was abolished; he subsequently wrote several satires and political pamphlets, for which he was imprisoned more than once. In 1719 appeared the work by which he is best known, "Robinson Crusoe;" he was the author of several other novels and miscellaneous works, and died in 1781. Anthony Ashley Cooper, third Earl of Shaftesbury, was born in 1671; in 1693 he became member of parliament for Poole in Dorsetshire; he was obliged, on account of his health, to retire from political life, and devoting himself to study, and corresponding with the literati of the day, he became eminent as a writer, and is distinguished for his lively and elegant style; he died in 1713.

Colley Cibber, the son of the famous sculptor, was born in 1671, and on the completion of his education entered the army; but when about eighteen years of age went upon the stage, where he soon became a popular favourite. In 1695 appeared his first piece of "Love's Last Shift," which was followed by "Woman's Wit," and a number of other pieces, many of which are still favourites. He was made poet laureate, and continued writing and playing till his death in 1757. Sir John Vanbrugh, the descendant of a Flemish family, was born in 1672, and at first entered the army, but soon turned dramatic writer, and produced the "Relapse," the "Confederacy," and several other witty and still favourite pieces; he was also a good architect, and erected Blenheim House, Castle-Howard, &c.; he was afterwards appointed Clarencieux king-at-arms, and in 1714 received the honour of knighthood; he was also comptroller of the Board of Works, and surveyor of Greenwich Hospital; he died in 1726.

Alexander Pope, the son of a wealthy linen-draper in Lombard Street, was born in 1688, and his parents being Roman Catholics, was instructed by one Taverner, a priest: when twelve years of age he retired with his parents to Binfield, in Windsor Forest, where he wrote his "Ode on Solitude." At the age of sixteen he wrote his "Pastorals;" several of his minor poems followed, and at last he published his translation of Homer's Iliad, by subscription. By that he cleared above £5,000, with which he purchased a residence at Twickenham. In 1727 his "Dunciad" appeared, as a satire on the numerous minor poets who had attacked him; the remainder of his poems followed in succession until his death, which took place on May 30, 1744, at the age of 56.

George Lillo was born in 1693, and for many years carried on the business of a jeweller, but devoted much of his time to the production of tragedies, some of which are still frequently performed; he died in 1739.

William Dormer Stanhope, Earl of Chesterfield, was born in 1694, and before the death of his father sat in parliament for Lostwithiel; he was a great favourite with George II., who made him a privy councillor, appointed him ambassador extraordinary to Holland in 1728, made him a knight of the garter in 1730, and afterwards appointed him steward of the household. The last office he soon resigned, and energetically opposed Sir Robert Walpole; in 1745 he was appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland, the duties of which office he ably fulfilled; he subsequently became secretary of state, but was obliged from his ill health to resign that post in 1748. He is chiefly known as an author by his famous "Letters to his Son;" he died in 1773.

William Hogarth was born in 1698, and was bound an apprentice to an engraver of arms on silver plate. About 1720 he engraved coats of arms and shop bills, and afterwards executed plates for the booksellers. His first painting was a representation of Wanstead Assembly. He married a daughter of Sir James Thornhill in 1730, and soon afterwards executed some paintings for the decoration of the Gardens at Vauxhall. His "Harlot's Progress" appeared in 1733, and was followed by those satirical representations of vice and folly, which stamped him as the greatest original painter of life and manners that England has produced. In 1757 he was made sergeant-painter to the king; and having, by his own exertions, secured wealth and eminence, died in 1762, and was buried at Chiswick.

John Jortin, D.D., famous as a scholar and a divine, was born in 1698, and educated at Cambridge, where he was employed by Pope to extract the notes from Eustathius to print with the Iliad.

He afterwards held several livings in succession, was a prebendary of St. Paul's, and archdeacon of London. He was the author of several valuable theological and ecclesiastical works, and as much beloved for his private virtues, as admired for his piety and talents: he died in 1770. Philip Doddridge, a talented and pious dissenting minister, was born in 1702, and was successively a minister at Kibworth, Market-Harborough, and Northampton. He wrote several valuable works, and died at Lisbon, where he had gone for the benefit of his health, in 1751.

John Dollond was born in Spitalfields in 1706, and brought up as a silk-weaver, but devoting himself to astronomy, particularly to the construction of telescopes and other astronomical instruments, became eminent as an optician, which business he carried on in conjunction with his eldest son Peter, who also made some valuable improvements in optical instruments. He died in 1761; his brother Peter died in 1820.

Dr. Thomas Augustine Arne was born in 1704, and at the age of eighteen produced the opera of "Rosamund;" he attained a great eminence as a composer, some of his melodies being the most beautiful ever produced. The famous Mrs. Cibber was his sister: he died in 1778. Richard Glover, the son of a London merchant, was born in 1712, and was educated at Cheam School, where, at sixteen years of age, he composed some excellent verses to the memory of Sir Isaac Newton; he afterwards became engaged in the Hamburg trade under his father; in 1737 he married a lady of fortune, and soon afterwards produced "Leonidas" and his other poems. He now became distinguished as a city politician, and showed that he possessed great oratorical ability. On the accession of George III. he represented Weymouth in parliament: he died in 1785. James Stuart, generally known as "Athenian Stuart," was born in 1713, and originally was a fan-painter, but having studied Greek, Latin, and the mathematics, travelled to Italy on foot, and accompanied by a skilful architect, named Nicholas Rivett, visited Athens, and made drawings of the architectural remains there. On his return he acquired great eminence as an architect, and became F.R.S. and F.S.A.: he died in 1788.

Thomas Gray was born in 1716, educated at Eton and Cambridge, and at first studied for the bar, but was persuaded to accompany Horace Walpole on the Continent; but he left him at Reggio, and returned to England. In 1747 he published his "Ode on a distant prospect of Eton College," and some years afterwards his "Elegy written in a Country Churchyard." Having refused the office of laureate on Cibber's death, he was presented by the Duke of Grafton with the professorship of modern history at Cambridge, with a salary of £400 per annum. Besides his poetical talents, Gray possessed much learning in natural history, ancient architecture, and other varieties of literature: he died in 1771.

Sir William Blackstone, an eminent judge, and well known as the author of the celebrated "Commentaries," and other valuable works on law, was born in 1723, and died in 1780. John Wilkes, famous for his violent political conduct, was born in 1727, had a good education, and after travelling on the Continent, married a lady of fortune, and became colonel of the Buckinghamshire Militia; he was M.P. for Aylesbury in 1761, but publishing a libel in No. 45 of the 'North Briton,' a periodical he had established, he was seized on a general warrant of the secretary of state, and committed to the Tower, but being brought up on a habeas corpus before the chief justice of the Common Pleas, was liberated. He was again prosecuted for the publication of an obscene poem, and retiring to France, was outlawed. In 1768 he was elected an M.P. for Middlesex, but was prevented from taking his seat, and committed to the King's Bench prison, on which some dreadful riots took place in St. George's Fields; his debts were then paid by subscription; he afterwards became mayor of London, and took his seat for Middlesex without opposition: he died in 1797.

Charles Churchill, the famous satirist, was educated at Westminster, contracted an early and imprudent marriage, and, entering holy orders, obtained a small Welsh curacy, which he vacated on the death of his father, succeeding him as curate of St. John's, Westminster. Being very extravagant, he was about to be imprisoned for debt, when Dr. Lloyd, of Westminster School, brought about a compromise with his creditors. Churchill now produced the "Rosciad," a satire on the principal actors of the time; and this proving successful, he followed it by several others, displaying great powers of satirical description. He then lived separate from his wife, but died at the early age of 34, in 1764. Richard Gough, the famous antiquary and topographer, was born in 1735, and at a very early age translated some works from the French, and in 1752 commenced studying at Cambridge, but soon devoted himself to antiquarian researches, in which he attained great celebrity: he died in 1809.

Samuel Horsley, born in 1733, was educated at Westminster and Cambridge, and successively held several livings, till he arrived at the episcopal dignity; he also rendered great services to the cause of science, and published some valuable works on theology and classical literature. William Milford, the famous historical and philological writer, was born in 1734, studied at Oxford and then at the Middle Temple, but quitting the study of the law, became colonel of the Hampshire Militia: he sat in parliament, successively, for Newport, Beeralston, and New Romney, was professor of ancient history at the Royal Academy, and, besides his "History of Greece," wrote many valuable works: he died in 1827. Anne Seymour Damer, who obtained great eminence as a sculptor, as well as for her general accomplishments, was born in 1748, being the daughter of Field-Marshal Conway; she took lessons in sculpture from Ceracci and Bacon, and subsequently studied in Italy: her death took place in 1808. John Milner, an eminent Roman Catholic divine and antiquarian, was born in 1752, ordained a priest in 1777, and commenced his pastoral duties at Winchester in 1779. Taking a great interest in the study of the antiquities with which Winchester abounds, he published several works on them, besides others in support of the Roman Catholic faith; he became a member of the Royal Society of Antiquaries in 1790, visited Rome in 1814, afterwards returned to England, and till the time of his death continued to publish controversial treatises: he died in 1826. Sir Samuel Romilly (the descendant of a French Protestant family, who left France after the revocation of the edict of Nantes), born in 1757, was at first intended for a solicitor, but afterwards studied for the bar; he rose to eminence, and ultimately took the lead in the Court of Chancery, being possessed of great eloquence and information. In 1806 he was appointed solicitor-general, and knighted; he made the most strenuous efforts for the revision of the criminal code of England, but being afflicted with brain fever at the loss of his wife, he put an end to his life in November, 1818.

The Right Hon. George Canning was born on the 11th April, 1770, and was left fatherless when quite an infant; he was placed, however, at Winchester, and afterwards at Eton; he also distinguished himself at Oxford, and then commenced studying for the bar, but being introduced to the House of Commons by Mr. Pitt, he devoted himself entirely to politics. In 1796 he was appointed under secretary of state, and, in 1800, married a daughter of General Scott, with a fortune of £100,000; he afterwards became foreign secretary in Percival's administration, but in consequence of a duel with Lord Castlereagh, was obliged to quit office. In 1812 he became M.P. for Liverpool, and, in 1816, was appointed president of the Board of Control, but retired from that office in 1820. He was afterwards, in 1822, appointed governor-general of India, but the death of the Marquis of Londonderry then taking place, he became secretary of state for the foreign department. He soon afterwards became premier, but over-exertion and excitement aggravating the effects of a cold taken at the funeral of the Duke of York, he died of an inflammatory disease in 1827, at the age of 57.

The Right Hon. George Gordon Byron, Lord Byron, was born on the 2d January, 1788, and was placed at an early age at the grammar-school of Aberdeen by his widowed mother; but when, in 1798, by the death of his great-uncle without issue, he succeeded to the family title and estates, he was placed under the guardianship of Lord Carlisle, who sent him to Harrow; he subsequently studied at Cambridge, and afterwards took up his residence at Newstead Abbey, and published his "Hours of Idleness," which being criticised rather severely, he produced his satire of "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," the most spirited poem of the kind in the English language. At that period he became plunged in extravagance and dissipation, and travelled on the Continent for some time. On his return he published his first two cantos of "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage," which was followed by the "Gisour," "Bride of Abydos," and other poems. In 1815 he married the daughter of Sir Ralph Milbanke Noel, but the union was not a happy one, and they separated after the birth of their daughter, which was the only fruit of their marriage. Lord Byron again travelled through various parts of the Continent, publishing his poems at intervals; till, in 1823, the state of the Greeks, when in collision with their late masters the Turks, exciting his sympathy, he determined to devote himself entirely to their cause; but being attacked by a fever, he was buried at Missi-longhi, on the 19th of April, 1824, in the 37th year of his age.

LOOE (EAST), CORNWALL, a chapelry, and an ancient but disfranchised borough, market town, and seaport, on the northern bank of the river Looe, at its efflux into the English Channel, in the parish of St. Martin: 258 miles from London (coach road 234), 8 from Liskeard. — Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 14 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 272 miles. — Money orders issued at Liskeard: London letters deliv^d 2 p.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. — East Looe formerly returned two members to parliament, but the franchise was destroyed by the Reform Act. The general importance of the place was at one time much greater than at present, the town having been erected into a borough as early as the reign of Henry II., at the instance of Henry de Bodrugan, who was then lord of the manor. In the reign of Edward III. it sent 20 ships or galleys, with 315 mariners, to the siege of Calais, and was at that time the only seaport of importance, except Fowey, in all Cornwall. The town is chiefly built on a flat piece of land, bounded by the river on the west, and the sea on the south. The inhabitants are now chiefly employed in the pilchard fishery, but formerly there was a considerable trade carried on with the Mediterranean, France, and Spain; the only remnants of this business are an inconsiderable coasting trade. The exports consist of tin, copper, and lead, timber, salt fish, and bark; the chief imports are of salt, coal, and limestone. The port is defended by a small battery and breastwork. The town consists of several small narrow streets, which, from their position, assume a very picturesque aspect, being surrounded by high and steep acclivities, most of which are beautified by terraced gardens. The parochial charities, for the size of the place, are numerous and important. In 1716, Sir Jonathan Trelawney, at one time bishop of Exeter, and afterwards of Winchester, left £2,000, of the proceeds of which four-tenths were to be paid to a clergyman for reading prayers every day, and preaching a sermon on Sundays; the remainder was to be applied to educational purposes. Speecot's and Buller's schools are endowed with £60 per annum, £30 of which are applied to teaching the poor children of the county mathematics and navigation, and the other £30 is used in teaching reading, writing, and accounts. The other charities produce about £4 a year. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Exeter: pres. net income, £40: patron, Bishop of Exeter: contains 154 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 926: ass^d prop^r £920: poor rates in 1838, £98. 3s. — Market day, Saturday. — Ship and Swan Inns.

LOOE, CORNWALL, a chapelry, and an ancient but disfranchised borough, on the western bank of the river Looe, in the parish of Tolland: 234 miles from London, 16 from Plymouth, 9 from Fowey. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — This was at one time a market town, but the market, which was held on a Saturday, has for some time been discontinued; but there is still a small harbour, which is defended by a battery of ten guns, on the beach. The name of Port-Pigham was given to West Looe, from a manor, now annexed to the duchy of Cornwall, and held on lease from the crown by the corporation. This place had returned two members to parliament ever since the reign of Edward VI., till it was disfranchised by the Reform Act. It is connected with East Looe by an old bridge over the river. The chapel fell into ruins, but was repaired, and converted into a guild-hall. The Independents have a chapel here. General Trelawney left £4 a year to the parish. — Contains 120 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 616: ass^d prop^r £565: poor rates in 1838, £51. 12s. — Fair, May 6.

Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 14 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 272 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 12.50 p.m.: post closes 8½ a.m. — This place is supposed by some authorities to have been the Roman station, called Uzella by Ptolemy; but few, if any, Roman remains have been discovered on its site or in the neighbourhood. Its name is believed to have been derived from its having been the residence of Wethiel, anciently an Earl of Cornwall, who had a palace at Penknicht, within the district of the present borough, but which now forms part of the parish of Lanbery. In the reign of Richard I. the town was held by Robert de Cardman, who procured for it the grant of a market; and Richard, Earl of Cornwall, brother of Henry III., made this, with Penknicht, a free borough. His son Edmond, besides several other privileges, granted that Lostwithiel should be made one of the places for taking the coinage of tin in Cornwall. In the summer of 1644, the town was the head-quarters of the Earl of Essex, the principal parliamentary general, who had established himself here in consequence of a defeat of the royalists under Sir Richard Greville, by Lord Robartes, in the immediate neighbourhood. Dugdale asserts that the church was profaned by the soldiery, and defaced by an explosion of gunpowder. Lostwithiel is pleasantly situated in a beautiful vale, on the banks of the river Fowey, on the highway from London to Falmouth—the river, which is crossed by a bridge, being navigable for barges as far as the quay during spring-tides. The town consists chiefly of two parallel streets, which extend from the river to the foot of a steep hill; it is lighted and paved, and there is a good supply of water. The houses are chiefly built of stone, and covered with slate, which abounds in the neighbourhood. The trade of the place consists chiefly in the importation of coal, timber, and other articles, for the miners in the interior—some of the mines in the environs being among the most valuable and important in the county, diffusing, when in active work, wealth and prosperity through the neighbourhood. The church is a handsome edifice, in the early English style, with a lantern tower at the west end, surmounted by a fine octagonal spire, erected in the fourteenth century; it contains an ancient stone font, on the sides of which are sculptured grotesque figures and armorial bearings, now much defaced. The town-hall is a neat building, erected in 1740, at the expense of the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe. A charter of incorporation was granted to Lostwithiel by James I. in 1623, and renewed by George II. in 1738, under which the corporation consists of seven aldermen or capital burgesses, including the mayor and seventeen assistants or common councilmen—the mayor, the late mayor, and the recorder, being justices of the peace. A court-leet is held annually, when presentments are made to the mayor respecting the borough and the river, and all persons having boats upon the river are required to render suit and service to this court. The borough first returned members to parliament in the thirty-third year of Edward I., and then ceased until the fourth year of Edward II., from which time the returns were made regularly until the second of William IV., when the place was entirely disfranchised. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. A free grammar-school was established in 1776, by the corporation, who gave the master a salary of £50 per annum. Two other schools have small endowments. About a mile northward of the town, on a lofty ridge, are the magnificent and venerable ruins of Restormal Castle, supposed to have been erected by Robert, Earl of Mortaigne, and which was anciently the residence of the Earls of Cornwall. Until his troops were defeated, it was occupied by Sir Richard Greville during the civil war. — The living (St. Bartholomew), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £2. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £96: patron, Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe: pres. incumbent, John Bower, 1816: contains 120 acres: 282 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 1,186: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,364: ass^d. prop^r. £1,498: poor rates in 1838, £383. 11d. streets, paved, and lighted with gas. During the last few years it has been remarkably improved, and the market-place now forms a fine oblong area, surrounded by good houses and elegant shops. The principal manufactures are those of the whole of the towns of that district, of worsted and cotton hosiery, with cotton goods, bobbin-net, lace, and fabrics of mohair. The enclosure and cultivation of a portion of Charnwood forest, has lately contributed much to the advantage of the town. A new church has been erected by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The Independents, Presbyterians, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, all have chapels here, as also have the Society of Friends, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. Loughborough enjoys the advantage of an excellent library and news-room; it has also a theatre. Four of the schools here are supported by endowments, which arise from lands bequeathed for that purpose by Mr. Thomas Burton: these several schools are held in separate apartments in one building, which was erected in 1829, at an expense of £1,500. The whole income derived from Burton's charity amounts to about £1,450 a year, of which about £400 is applied in support of the schools, and the rest is expended on parochial objects. The other charities produce about £420 per annum, of which a considerable portion is laid out in clothing and apprenticing poor children. Dispensaries, and other urban institutions for the relief of the poor, are numerous. A court-leet and baron is held here annually, by the lord of the manor, at which constables, third-boroughs, as they are called, street-masters, field-reeves, and other officers, are appointed for the municipal government of the town. A workhouse has been erected here, which is capable of accommodating 350 persons. The Loughborough poor-law union comprises 24 parishes, with a population of about 25,000 persons, spread over an area of 65 square miles. The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a rectory, formerly in the archd^y of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, now in the diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £40. 13s. 3d.: pres. net income, £1,000: patron, Emanuel College, Cambridge: pres. incumbent, Henry Fearon, 1848: contains 5,460 acres: 2,176 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 10,170: probable popⁿ in 1849, 11,695: ass^d. prop^r £21,278: poor rates in 1838, £2,214. 6s. LOUTH, LINCOLNSHIRE, a parish, borough, and market town, in the Wold division of the hun^d of Louth-Esk, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth: 141 miles from London (coach road 148), 26 from Lincoln. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough and Boston to Louth station: from Derby, through Grantham and Boston, &c., 102 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. — This is a neat, clean, and well-built town, healthfully situated, and consists of a number of streets, mostly good, but irregularly disposed. It was anciently called Luda, from its situation on the Lud, a small rivulet formed by the confluence of two streams in a fertile valley, at the eastern foot of the Wold. Towards the west, the rising grounds afford numerous and varied prospects, the scenery of this range of hills being rapidly diversified with height and dale, but somewhat bare of timber. Towards the west the country is level and well-wooded, and is agreeably interspersed with villages, churches, and mansions. But Louth has few historical memoria, the most striking incident in its annals being the part the inhabitants took in the rebellion excited in 1536, by the suppression of the monastic institutions, and called the "Pilgrimage of Grace," when Dr. Mackerel, alias Captain Cobbler, the prior of Barling's Abbey, was an active partisan, and with the vicar of Louth, and thirteen other ringleaders, was executed for his treason. Prior to that suppression, the conventual buildings in Louth were numerous, but none of them appear to have been of any particular note. Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, a celebrated man in his time, in 1139 built an abbey in the park, near the town, for Cistercian monks, whom he brought from Fountains to Ha-verholm; their revenues at the general dissolution amounted to £169 per annum. But few traces are left of the monastery. There were formerly two parish churches in Louth, but of these, that of St. James alone remains. A new church was built about the year 1833, by subscription, chiefly of one individual, but without endowment. The living of St. James's is a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the prebendary of Louth in the cathedral of Lincoln; rated at £12; gross income £350. Tithes commuted 1801. The church is a beautiful structure in the later style of English architecture, with a rich tower and spire 288 feet in height. It is considered one of the finest structures in a county celebrated for its churches. The prebend of Louth is rated at £36. 3s. 4d., and in the patronage of the bishop. Here are an Independent chapel, formed in 1820; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1837; and a Primitive Methodist, in 1820: the Baptists and Roman Catholics have also places of worship. A free grammar-school was founded by Edward VI., and endowed with the revenues of several of the suppressed guilds or brotherhoods, the head-master and under-master receiving very handsome stipends, while a fourth of the amount, about £160, is yearly paid to twelve beadswomen. The corporation are the governors of the school, under the king's charter. James I. granted a charter for a quarter sessions, and for the appointment of a warden and one assistant, to act as justices of the peace for the borough, the boundaries of which were made co-extensive with those of the parish; by the charter given in the 10th year of George IV., two additional assistants were also appointed. The income of the corporation is about £1,300 a year. For its trade, Louth depends almost entirely upon the agricultural population by which it is surrounded. The principal traffic outwards is by the Louth Navigation, a canal formed in 1761, at an expense of about £12,000, and through which corn is exported to London and Yorkshire, and coal and other similar commodities are received in exchange; but there are various steam and wind mills, paper mills, and other works in the vicinity, and Louth is also celebrated for its ale, a considerable quantity of which is brewed here. A workhouse has been erected here, which is capable of accommodating about 300 persons; the Louth poor-law union comprises 87 parishes, with a population of 26,000 persons, spread over an area of 238 square miles. — The living (St. James) contains 3,620 acres: 1,447 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 8,935: probable popⁿ in 1849, 10,275: ass^d prop^r £17,761: poor rates in 1838, £2,245. 11s. Sir Thomas was created a baronet in 1814.

LOWESTOFT, SUFFOLK, a parish, seaport, and market town, in the hun^d. and union of Mutford and Lothingland: 136 miles from London (coach road 114), 10 from Yarmouth. —East. Co^t. Rail. through Norwich to Lowestoft station: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Norwich, &c., 188 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m. and 7 p.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. —Lowestoft is situated on the easternmost point of the English coast, upon a lofty eminence, which commands an extensive view of the German Ocean, and forms a remarkably beautiful object when beheld from the sea. It consists chiefly of one principal street, running in a gradual descent from north to south, with several others of much smaller size diverging from it on each side. The High Street is situated just on the summit of the cliff, so that the houses on the east side of it face the sea. The declivity, which falls from the height to the sands below, was formerly merely a bare and desert object, but improvements have of late years so progressed, that it has been altogether covered with highly cultivated gardens, beautified with alcoves, and the other evidences of taste and refinement. At the bottom of the gardens, a long range of buildings has been erected the whole length of the town, for curing fish. The dealers have thus the advantage of an easy transfer of their herrings from the water, and the inhabitants above are saved from the unpleasant effluvia which necessarily arises from the curative process; but this benefit is in some measure counteracted by the distance from the lodgings of those invalids and other visitors who resort to Lowestoft for sea-bathing, for which the shore, consisting of a hard sand, is peculiarly favourable. The parochial church is situated about half a mile to the west of the town; the supposed reason for its having been erected there being, that it would be more safe from the incursions of the sea. It is an ancient and interesting edifice, with a tower and spire about 120 feet high. The body of the church consists of a nave, separated from two side aisles by rows of lofty handsome pillars, and a chancel; this last being neat and elegant. In popish times the church had a rood loft, which was accidentally discovered some years since by the falling of some bricks from a buttress. The principal entrance is a stately porch on the south side, over which there is a room called the "Maids' Chamber," which is said to have received its appellation from having been, before the Reformation, the residence of two maiden sisters, named Elizabeth and Catherine, who lived in religious seclusion. Of these two ladies it is further reported, that they caused two wells to be dug between the church and the town, for the benefit of the inhabitants, and that the present name of them, "Basket Wells," is only a corruption of Beas and Kate. Many persons of considerable note have been buried here, and among them are Rear-Admiral Usher, who took a share in most of the hard naval engagements fought with the Dutch in the early part of the reign of Charles II.; and Admiral Sir John Aahby, who defeated the French in the battle of Bantry Bay, and in the engagements of Beachy Head, in 1689, and Cape La Hogue, in 1792; for these achievements he was knighted, and subsequently was made post-admiral and commander-in-chief of the royal navy, and general of marines. Next to his there is a monument to the memory of his nephew, Captain Mighell, who greatly distinguished himself in most of the naval actions at the beginning of the last century. Formerly there were two chapels in Lowestoft, but one was swallowed up in the ravages of the sea, and the other fell into a ruinous condition. These have been replaced by a new chapel of ease, erected within the last few years; it is a handsome Gothic edifice, dedicated to St. Peter. Lowestoft is also provided with a theatre, assembly-room, public library, and gas-works; and, in 1840, an excellent infirmary was opened for the benefit of the poor. Lowestoft is an out-station under the port of Yarmouth, and belongs to the custom-house establishment there; it has a principal coast officer. South-westward of the town lies Lake Lothing, containing 160 acres, which forms a harbour and part of the ship canal commenced in 1827; the entrance to the present harbour from the sea was opened in 1831. Over the lock there is an iron swing-bridge of 50 feet span, which opens in the centre, and allows a free passage for vessels in the whole of that space. At the west end of the lake, between the sea water and the inland waters of the country, a ship lock has been erected, with two pairs of gates which point either way, thus allowing free ingress and egress at all times. Other great improvements have since been added, but the chief of them has been the formation of the railway, which only terminates at the harbour. The chief trade of the town consists in fish, the men taking to the herring and mackerel fishing alternately; and there are also numerous establishments for boat and ship-building, and the manufacture of rope, twine, sailcloth, and other similar sea stores. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Independents, all have chapels here; and the charitable endowments of the place are very numerous for its size, some of them very ancient. Some few years ago, six almshouses were built for six of the poorest master-fishermen of the town, who also participate in the other benefactions. Lowestoft forming part of the royal demesne, its inhabitants are freed from serving on juries, but petty sessions are held here every Wednesday. The coast is protected by two forts and a small battery. On the shore there are two lighthouses; one on the brow of the hill, at the northern entrance of the town, has a revolving light; the lower one is constructed of timber, and is moveable at pleasure. This is done in order to show the right channel when altered by the shifting of the sands. The learned William Whiston, professor of mathematics at Cambridge, Bishop Tanner, author of the 'Notitia Monastica,' and

Robert Potter of 'Æschylus,' 'Euripides,' and 'Sophocles,' were vicars of this parish.---The living (St. Margaret), a vicarage in the archd^y of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £10. 1s. 4d.: pres. net income, £323: patron, Bishop of Norwich: pres. incumbent, F. LOWTHER, WESTMORELAND, a parish in West ward, union of West ward, on the river Lowther: 276 miles from London, 4 from Penrith, 12 from Appleby.—Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Lancaster to Clifton station, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 176 miles.—Money orders issued at Penrith: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m.—The village of Lowther formerly stood before the north front of the present castle, and consisted of the hall, church, and seventeen tenements, with their messuages and cottages; but the latter of these were purchased by Sir John Lowther in 1682; the lands were laid to his demesne, and the buildings pulled down to open the prospect from the hall. In lieu of the village, Sir John built Lowther new town, which consists of the habitations of the tenantry and dependents of the Earl of Lonsdale. The old rectory-house of Lowther was a mean edifice, but the first Viscount Lowther rebuilt it in a handsome style, in a secluded but delightful situation on the banks of the river, at the same time exchanging lands for the glebe much to the advantage of the rectory. The church was also, about the same period, rebuilt by the same nobleman; it is finished with a dome and lantern, after the fashion of St. Paul's Cathedral in London. It stands, embosomed in trees, on a high bank overlooking the Lowther, is elegantly finished, and contains several handsome monuments of the noble family whose domain it adorns. Lowther Castle, one of the most superb of the noble residences in the British dominions, stands on the site of an old mansion which was pulled down and rebuilt, in 1685, by Sir John Lowther, whose edifice was, however, almost entirely destroyed by fire in 1720. His successor, the earl, provided immense quantities of stone, timber, and other materials, for the erection of the present magnificent structure, but it was destined for the fine comprehension and elegant taste of his son to carry his design into execution. The foundation was laid in 1808, and was partially occupied in 1809. The building is of stone, and is of the style which prevailed for castellated residences during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. The entrance to it is from the north, through an arched gateway, and all the other appliances of a first-rate noble's domain. From the gateway an embattled wall extends, with towers at intervals, enclosing an entrance court of verdant turf, intersected by a gravelled walk, and bounded on each side by roads 30 feet broad, which rise to a terrace 500 feet long, and 100 feet wide. The centre of the north front is embellished with a rich open porch for receiving carriages; that leads to an entrance hall, 60 feet by 30, which opens upon a staircase 60 feet square, and 90 feet high, surrounded by corridors on each story, which conducts to the several apartments. From the staircase, arched stone corridors also open upon each side, through the centre of the castle, into corridors with arcades lighted at each end by windows of painted glass. To say that the apartments in such an edifice as this are ample in dimensions, and magnificent in their appearance, would be a superfluity. All that the most refined taste, and the most unlimited outlay could purchase, have been contributed to their adornment. Nor is the outside of the castle unworthy of the structure of which it is the cynosure, for the parks and pleasure-grounds which surround this magnificent edifice are not only of large extent, and of singular picturesqueness of beauty, but the different portions of them command most extensive and varied prospects, if equalled, certainly not surpassed, by any other place of similar character in the kingdom. The noble lord of this splendid domain, the Earl of Lonsdale, derives his descent from one of the most ancient families in the kingdom. Olaus Wormius, who was consulted by Spelman, found "Loder," or "Lothor," a common name among the ancient kings of Denmark, and derives it from the term Loth-er, or "fortunate honour;" and certain it is, that the family of Lowther have been seated in Cumberland and Westmoreland from the remotest periods of anything like authentic history. The first, however, of the name, who appears prominently on the rolls of our annals, was Sir Richard Lowther, Knt., who was high sheriff of Cumberland in the 8th and 30th of Elizabeth, succeeding his cousin Henry, Lord Soroop, as lord-warden of the West Marches; and was thrice commissioner in the great affairs between England and Scotland in the reign of the same queen. The grandson of this gentleman sat for some time as the representative of Westmoreland in the House of Commons, during the reigns of James I. and Charles I.; and his eldest son, Sir John Lowther, who also sat for Westmoreland, was created a baronet in 1675. Sir John Lowther, the grandson of that gentleman, and the thirty-first knight in direct succession in the family, was, in 1690, made first commissioner of the Treasury, and elevated to the peerage by the titles of Viscount Lonsdale and Baron Lowther. The viscounty ceased on the death of his grandson, Lord Henry, the third viscount, but the estates and the baronetcy descended to his great-nephew, Sir James Lowther, eldest son of Robert Lowther, Esq., governor of Barbadoes, who was, in 1784, created a peer by the titles of Baron Lowther of Lowther, Viscount Lowther, and Earl of Lonsdale. Having no issue, he, in 1797, obtained a new patent, which created him Baron and Viscount Lowther, with remainder to his cousin, the Rev. Sir William Lowther, Bart., of Swillington. The earl died without issue, and his first titles died with him, but his latter honours devolved on Sir William, son of the rev. baronet, who was, in addition, in 1807, created Earl of Lonsdale. His lordship, who was a knight of the Garter, lieutenant-colonel in the army, lord-lieutenant of the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and recorder of Carlisle, died in 1844, when he was succeeded in his titles and estates by the present noble proprietor, who has filled a distinguished office in the state, is lieutenant-colonel commandant of the Westmoreland Militia, and was elevated to the House of Lords during the lifetime of his father. The boys entitled to enjoy the advantages of the institution must be resident in the parishes, hamlets, and townships of Lucton, Croft, Yarpole, Bircher, Luston, Eyton, Kingland, Shobdon, and Aymestrey, and at the time of their election must be able to read. These boys are distinguished into two classes---the sons of persons not possessing land of their own, of the yearly value of £20, or renting property worth £50 per annum; and the sons of persons not having property of their own of the yearly value of £50, or renting property not worth £300 per annum. Both classes are entitled to all the benefits of the school; but while the first class obtain their education altogether gratuitously, and receive a suit of clothes once a year, the second have to pay £1 per annum as a fee. Boys in the first class are limited to fifty, and the vacancies are filled up half-yearly. A difference is made between boys intended for business, and those who aspire to higher functions. Those which are to be apprenticed, are admissible between the ages of seven and ten years, and must leave the school at the age of fourteen; those going to college may remain till they are eighteen, and may be admitted at any age not exceeding fourteen. A fee of £10 is given to those who are to be apprenticed. Of the second class of boys there are twenty-two, and a college exhibition of £51 a year is given every alternate year, if there be a candidate duly qualified. The school is conducted by a clergyman, who is a clergyman and a graduate of Oxford or Cambridge, and who is aided by an assistant who can teach mathematics, and the other higher branches of education. The school consists of two departments, and parents can choose either, and the children can migrate from one to the other. The other charities of Lacton amount to about £3 a year. Rail. through Oxford and Worcester to Kidderminster, thence 22 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Kidderminster, &c., 93 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. This place, called by the British Dinan Llys Tyrysog, or the Prince's Palace, richly deserved its appellation from the beauty of the neighbourhood in which it stands, and the splendid prospects of the surrounding country which its site commands. It is placed on an eminence at the junction of the rivers Teme and Corve, in a fertile and picturesque district on the southern border of the county, being about a mile in length, and, on an average, half a mile in breadth. Most of the streets are wide and well paved, lying in diverging and inclined directions from the highest, which is the central part of the town, a circumstance which contributes greatly to the cleanliness of the place: the houses are mostly neatly built, and regularly disposed, which may be attributed partly to the fact, that the royal court was for some time held in the castle here. In after ages, when that distinction was lost, the pleasant and healthy situation of the town induced many families of wealth and refinement to make it their abode, so that the old advantages in this respect were still retained. The ancient history of Ludlow is so much involved in that of its castle, that to relate the one is to tell the other. This edifice, now only a desolate ruin, stands at the north-west angle of the town, on a bold wooded rock, the foot of which is bathed by the river. According to the most generally received opinions, it was founded shortly after the Norman Conquest, by Roger de Montgomery, by whose family it was held till it was seized by Henry I., on the rebellion of his descendant, Robert de Belesme. Becoming then a princely residence, it was guarded by a numerous garrison; but, in the succeeding reign, the governor, Gervase Paganell, having betrayed his trust, in delivering the castle to the Empress Maude, it was besieged by King Stephen, who, in conducting the operations against it, gave a signal proof of his courage and humanity. The young Prince Henry of Scotland, son of King David, who was actively engaged in the enterprise, having approached too near the walls of the castle, was caught from his horse by means of an iron hook attached to a rope. Stephen, according to the evidence of Matthew Paris, observing the perilous position of the young Prince, boldly advanced, and rescued him at the risk of his own life. Stephen was, according to Lambard, shortly afterwards rewarded for his heroism by the capture of the place. In the reign of Henry III., Ludlow Castle was made a rendezvous of the lords-marchers, for the purpose of aiding Roger Mortimer, then lord-warden of the marches, in restraining the Welsh marauders. The castle subsequently passed through a variety of hands during the troublous times of the wars of the Roses, and was made the abode of Edward V. and his little brother, previous to their removal to their last fatal dwelling, the Tower of London, under the guardianship of the cruel Gloucester. It was here that the eldest and promising Prince Arthur, son of Henry VII., died in April, 1502. Ludlow having now become a place of considerable extent and importance, Henry VIII. made it the seat of a "Council in the Marches of Wales," with proper officers, and an adjudicated sphere of local government. This council continued to act till the time of William III., who abolished it, and appointed in its stead lords-lieutenants of North and South Wales. During the civil war, Ludlow was held by the Earl of Bridgewater for King Charles, but ultimately surrendered to the parliament. It was here that Milton's celebrated 'Masque of Comus' was first performed in 1631. Part of the site of the castle is now occupied by a delightful promenade, pleasantly shaded by trees. In the interior, on the right hand, are the barracks erected by the lords-presidents; and on the left, the imposing and massive Norman keep, upwards of 110 feet high, having walls from 9 to 12 feet in thickness. Opposite the portal are the state apartments and the principal hall, in the early and decorated styles of English architecture, but which are now mostly in ruins. A Norman arch, leading to the choir and nave, is almost the only relic of the chapel. On the whole, the remains of this ancient and once stately edifice are, in the extreme, interesting, from their natural beauty and the many historical associations which the sight and the thought of them renew, and deep and earnest are the feelings which they arouse, albeit the present be only a shadow of the past. Time's potent power has passed over all its beauty; the stately pageant, the lordly revels, the glorious hale of royalty and wealth, have yielded to the slow overmantling of sublimary decay. All is dim, still, and desolate; but the voice of an undying spirit speaks through the silent mementos of days by-gone, and brings forth, not only the bravery of the gentles by whom his song was echoed, but the heart of the genius himself. In the beautiful words of the poet:—

"Here Milton sung—what needs a greater spell
To lure the stranger to these far-famed walls!
The chroniclers of other ages tell,
That princes oft have graced fair Ludlow's halls.
Their honours glide along oblivion's stream,
And o'er the wrecks a tide of ruin drives;
Faint, and more faint, the rays of glory beam,
That gild their course—the bard alone survives.
And when the rude unceasing shocks of time
In one vast heap shall whelm this lofty pile,
Still shall his genius, towering and sublime,
Triumphant o'er the spoils of grandeur smile;
Still in these haunts, true to a nation's tongue,
Echo shall love to dwell, and say, here Milton sung."

It was in this neighbourhood, that Lucien, the brother of Napoleon Buonaparte, made his residence during the greater part of the time that he was in England. The boundaries of the town are chiefly described by its two rivers—the Corve, running along its north-western, and the Teme, along the western and southern outskirts of the town; the former is crossed by a bridge of three arches, over which the road leads to Shrewsbury, and the latter by two bridges, one on the south to Ludford, and the other on the west to Whitecliffe Common. Part of the ancient wall, built in the time of Edward I., may still be traced. The town is lighted with gas, and abundantly supplied with water by pipes from springs in the neighbourhood, and by works from the river Corve, by which it is conveyed to different parts of the several houses. The church, which stands in the highest part of the town, is a very beautiful Gothic structure in the decorated style, forming one of the finest parochial churches in the kingdom; it is surmounted by a tower, 130 feet in height, crowned with pinnacles, and furnished with a very melodious peal of eight bells. The choir is lighted with five windows on each side, and has a splendid stained glass window at the east end, the compartments of which represent the legendary history of the tutelar saint, St. Lawrence. On the north side there is a chapel dedicated to St. John, the windows of which also contain some very precious stained glass, representing the presentation of a ring to Edward the Confessor, by some pilgrims from Palestine. In the chancel there are several interesting monuments, especially one of Judge Bateman and his lady; but many of the ornaments of this church were destroyed by Cromwell's republican soldiery, who, however, spared a great portion of the beautiful oaken roof. The church of St. Lawrence anciently possessed a chantry of ten priests, supported by the rich guild of St. John, who gave to its choral duty the imposing splendour of a cathedral service. A free grammar-school was founded here in the time of Edward VI., which has now an income of about £100 per annum, besides an excellent dwelling-house and a garden; it is open to the whole town, and there are about forty scholars instructed on the foundation; the head-master generally acts as preacher to the town on another foundation of Edward VI. of £44. 13s. 4d., together with another dwelling-house and premises, worth £20 per annum. In 1704, the Rev. Richard Grave granted two exhibitions at Baliol College, Oxford, to this school. The total amount of the charitable income of the corporation is about £1,000 per annum, of which £224. 10s. constitute the income of Hosyer's almshouses, and £120 the income of a workhouse. Besides these there are several minor charities, including dispensaries and other similar institutions, for the benefit of the poor. The Independents, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, have chapels here. Manufactures to some extent are carried on at Ludlow, but it is chiefly supported by the surrounding country districts, and its own wealthy and independent residents. This place appears to have been incorporated from time immemorial, and no doubt enjoyed peculiar privileges from being the residence of the court in ancient times, as noticed above; but the first charter, of which we have any authentic notice, is that granted by Richard, Duke of York, father of Edward IV. The governing charter, however, was that granted by his son, which remained in exercise till the passing of the general municipal act. Under that act the corporation now consists of four aldermen and twelve town-councillors, under the usual corporate style. The amount of the borough income is about £1,000 per annum. A new commission of the peace has been granted, and the court of quarter sessions has been reappointed. Petty sessions are held every week or oftener, and a court-leet annually, for the appointment of constables and other officers. Ludlow first returned members to parliament in the twelfth year of Edward IV., the right of voting being in the burgesses at large. The borough, previously to the Reform Act, returned two representatives, as it now does, but the boundaries have been largely extended. The town is one of the polling-places for the southern division of the county. The Ludlow poor-law union comprises thirty-one parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons, spread over an area of 125 square miles. —The living (St. Lawrence), a rectory in the archd^y of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £19. 12s. 6d.: pres. net income, £160: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, J. Within the parish of Lullworth, numerous relics of antiquity have been discovered; and on a lofty hill, called Flower's Barrow, there is a triple intrenchment, enclosing an area of about five acres, which Aubrey supposes to have been a British camp. — The living (St. Andrew) is a vicarage in the diocese of Sarum: pres. net income, £109: patron, J. Weld, Esq.: pres. incumbent, J. U. Cooke, 1835: contains 2,860 acres: 67 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 392: ass^d. prop^r. £1,660: poor rates in 1838, £56. 5s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — Lullworth Castle, the great ornament of this part of the country, and the seat of the eminent Roman Catholic family of the Welds, stands close to the village. It is a massive cube of 80 feet on each side, with a round tower at each corner. It was begun in 1588, and finished in 1641, when it became, by purchase, the property of the family by whom it is now held. The interior is magnificently furnished, and around it stretches an extensive and beautiful park. Joseph Weld, Esq., the proprietor of this splendid domain, who married the Hon. Charlotte Elizabeth, a daughter of Charles Philip, sixteenth Lord Stourton, derives descent from Edric, surnamed Wild, or Sylvatricus, who was nephew to Edric, duke of Mercia, husband of Edina, daughter of Ethelred, king of England, whose descendants, through this long course of ages, have intermarried with the first families in the kingdom. Mr. Weld, who has another seat at Pilewell, in Hampshire, succeeded his brother, the late Thomas Weld, Esq., who, upon the decease of his wife, became a Catholic clergyman, and ultimately attained to the dignity of a cardinal, being the first Englishman that had ever obtained a seat in the conclave since the pontificate of Clement IX.

LULLWORTH (Wesst), Dorset, a chapelry on the shore of the English Channel, in the liberty of Bindon, locally within the hun^d of Winfrith, Blandford division of the county: 119 miles from London, 9 from Wareham, 14 from Weymouth. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — There is a great natural curiosity here, called Lullworth Cove, which communicates with the sea through a deep channel, being covered in, and overhung by, lofty and ragged rocks. The arched rock, which stands about a mile from the cove, has an opening about 20 feet high, apparently worn by the long-continued action of the waves at a long past era. Many of the inhabitants of this part of the coast gain a livelihood in constant peril, through gathering the eggs laid by the razorbill and the puffin on these rocks. — The living is a curacy, annexed to the rectory of Winfrith-Newburgh: contains 3,240 acres: 90 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 407: ass^d. prop^r. £721: poor rates in 1838, £191. 3s.

rectory of Suckley: contains 760 acres: 25 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 120: ass^d. prop^r. £949: poor rates in 1838, £61.

LUMBY. See HUDDLESTONE WITH LUMBY.

LUMLEY (GREAT), DURHAM, a chapelry on the eastern bank of the Wear, in the parish of Chester-le-Street—(which see for access, &c.): 264 miles from London, 6 from Durham, 2 from Chester-le-Street. — Money orders issued at Durham: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. — Lumley Hospital was founded by John Duck, Esq.; the other charities produce about £50 a year. There are several extensive collieries in the chapelry. — Contains 1,730 acres: 411 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,796: probable popⁿ in 1849, 2,066: ass^d. prop^r. £8,922: poor rates in 1837, £268. 11s.

LUMLEY (LITTLE), DURHAM, a township on the southern bank of the river Wear, in the parish of Chester-le-Street: 263 miles from London, 5 from Durham, 10 from Sunderland. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — Contains 750 acres: 73 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 381: poor rates in 1838, £61. 6s. — Lumley Castle, one of the seats of the Earl of Scarborough, is a magnificent baronial structure, standing on a fine elevated situation, the land of which rises gradually, on the south and west, from the bosom of the river Wear; the east front is near the brow of a height which overlooks a deep and well-wooded valley, through which the Beck, a burn or mountain streamlet, winds towards the river. This stately mansion forms a quadrangle, with an area in the centre. At each angle there are projecting turrets, of an octangular form, which overhang the face of each square at the base, and are machicolated for the purpose of beating off any assailants, and which give to the whole building a singular but very imposing appearance. The whole structure is formed of yellow freestone, which wears a very bright and beautiful tint at a distance. The chief entrance to the castle is in the west front, by a noble double flight of steps, and a platform, filling the whole space between the towers. The south front, which is modern, is brought almost parallel with the faces of the towers. The front to the north is obscured by offices; but towards the east the castle retains all its ancient form, and wears a most august appearance; its projecting gateway, commanded by turrets and a machicolated gallery, being very bold and stately. Above this gate there are six shields with armorial bearings, deeply carved in stone, with their crests contemporary with the building. By these we ascertain that Sir Ralph de Lumley obtained from Richard II., as well as from the Bishop of Skirlaw, permission to repair his castle here, to build a wall with mortar and stone, and to embattle the structure. The original fabric was constructed in the time of Edward I. by Sir Robert Lumley, and was enlarged by his son, Sir Marmaduke. There are three stories in this east front, having mullioned windows, guarded with iron; a narrow space for a terrace, between the walls and the brink of a precipice, is guarded by a curtain. The whole arrangement and appearance of this front sufficiently indicate it to have been part of the original structure, and a grand model of the taste of the age.

On every side of the castle, splendid, extensive, and varied prospects abound, comprising almost every feature that could be desired in landscape scenery. The castle is superbly furnished, and contains a great number of highly valuable and interesting family portraits. The noble family of Scarborough derive their descent from Liulph, son of Osbert de Lumley, who married Elgitha, daughter of Alfred, Earl of Northumberland, by Edgina, daughter of Ethelred II. This Liulph was a nobleman of great popularity in the time of Edward the Confessor, and was murdered by Leofriso, chaplain to Walcher, bishop of Durham, which so exasperated the populace that they sacrificed both the prelate and his follower in their resentment. The eldest son of Liulph assumed the surname of Lumley, and from him was descended the Sir Robert Lumley spoken of above, who was summoned to parliament as one of the barons of the realm, but who died on the field of battle during the rebellion of Thomas de Holland, Earl of Kent, in the early part of the fifteenth century. He was attainted, but his property was restored to his son, Sir John Lumley, who did homage to Henry VI. for the return of his estates; and the son of that gentleman again obtained the barony. From him was descended John, Lord Lumley, who was one of the peers that sat in judgment upon the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots, and Devereux, Earl of Essex. He died childless, and with him the barony expired, but the estates devolved on his kinsman, Sir Richard Lumley, who was, in 1628, elevated to the peerage of Ireland by the title of Viscount Lumley. This nobleman was a zealous adherent of Charles I., and one of Prince Albert's principal commanders during the civil war. His son Richard, the second viscount, was enrolled among the barons of England in 1681, in 1689 was created Viscount Lumley of England, and, in the following year, was elevated to the earldom of Scarborough. From him the present noble proprietor of Lumley is the eighth in descent. His lordship has another seat in Yorkshire, called Sandbeck Castle.

LUND, LANCASTER, a chapelry at the mouth of the Ribble, in the parish of Kirkham—(which see for access, &c.)—223 miles from London, 3 from Kirkham, 6 from Preston.—Money orders issued at Kirkham: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m.—The living, a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Manchester, is valued at £6. 18s. 4d.: pres. net income, £342: patron, Christ Church, Oxford: pres. incumbent, Richard Moore, 1820.—(Popⁿ. returned with the parish.)

LUNDY (ISLAND OF), DEVON, in the hun^d. of Braunton, situated at the mouth of the Bristol Channel: 245 miles from London, 12 from Hartland Point, 32 from Tenby.—This island is about three miles in length and one in breadth, and comprises nearly 2000 acres. It is almost inaccessible, being environed by lofty rocks, one of the cliffs rising to the elevation of 800 feet above the sea-level, and is surmounted by a lofty pyramidal rock, called the Constable. Lundy was at one time the stronghold of pirates—one of the most celebrated of whom, William de Morisco, after an unsuccessful attempt upon the life of King Henry III., fled here, and was enabled to establish himself for some time, but was at length taken, and suffered death with sixteen of his followers. Lambard, in speaking of the island, says—King Edward II., persuaded of the strengthe of this islande, and flying the persecution of Isabell his wife, and the nobilitye that assisted her, intended to have entered the same, but he was dryven backe with a contrarye winde, and beaten into Glamorganshyre, where he lurked for a tyme in the abbey of Nethe, beinge put in comforte by the Welshemen that he should abyde there unespied, which notwithstanding weare in thende hyred for Judas's rewarde (a little money I should say) to betraye him their soveraigne maister. 'During the civil war the castle was held by Lord Saye and Seale for the king; and in the reign of William it fell for some time into the hands of the French.' The island is indeed only accessible on one, the eastern side, where a small beach, sheltered by some detached rocks, called the Isle of Rats, admits of a safe approach. There is a mansion on the island with usual out-offices, a blacksmith's forge, and several labourers' cottages. Lundy is famous for its butter, and some cattle are reared upon it; and there is, besides, an abundance of rabbits. Within these few years a vein of silver and copper has been discovered, and the mine is likely to prove of considerable value. The island has always been of great importance to the Bristol traders, and a fine lighthouse has been erected for their accommodation.

LUTON, BEDFORD, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Flitt, union of Luton: the parish comprises the hamlets of East and West Hyde, Lee-grave or Lightgrave, Limbury-cum-Biscott, and Stopsley: 53 miles from London (coach road 31), 5 from Dunstable. Nor. West. Rail. to Dunstable, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Rugby to Dunstable, 89 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6.50 p.m. The town of Luton is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Lea—which rises at Leagrave, an adjacent hamlet—and formerly consisted principally of three streets, which diverge obliquely from the market-house, which stands in the centre; but within the last four or five years, not less than twenty new streets have been added to them. It is supposed to have existed in the time of Offa. The church is a fine old Gothic structure, with a square embattled tower, composed of chequered flint and stone; the interior consists of a nave and aisles, separated by low pointed arches, north and south chapels and a chancel, containing some handsome monuments, and a fine painting by Fuseli, presented by the Marquis of Bute. Luton is celebrated for the manufacture of straw-hats and bonnets, for which there are several splendid establishments, which have business connections in all parts of the world. There is also a large iron and brass foundry, a gas establishment, and an excellently arranged fire-brigade, consisting of two bodies of thirteen men each, established when Bedfordshire was so much devastated with incendiary fires. A handsome town-hall has lately been erected at the junction of the Luton and Bedford roads. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Independents, all have chapels here. The parochial charities produce about £120 a year. Luton is a polling-place for the county. A work-house has been erected here, which is capable of containing 300 inmates. The Luton poor-law union comprises 15 parishes, spread over an area of seventy square miles. About a mile and a half to the east of the town lies Luton Park, at one time a seat of the Marquis of Bute, but now the property of Charles Thomas Warde, Esq. of Clapton House, near Warwick. The mansion, which was nearly destroyed by fire about five years ago, stands on an eminence in the centre of the park, which is about 1,300 acres in extent, finely timbered, and adorned with all those ornamental features which, with their farm-houses, farm-lodges, meandering streams, and thick plantations, render the residences of the higher classes in England so delightful. Near Luton Park are the remains of Summerie's tower, the last of a castellated mansion built by John de Wenlock. The living (the Virgin Mary), a vicarage, with the curacy of East Hyde, is valued at £35. 12s. 1d.: pres. net income, £1,350: patron, John King, Esq.: pres. incumbent, W. M'Donnall, 1827: contains 15,500 acres: 1,073 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 7,748: probable popⁿ in 1849, 11,000: ass^d prop^y £4,605: poor rates in 1838, £1,706 10s. Market day, Monday. Fairs: third Monday in April and Oct.—Bankers: Sharples, Exton, & Lucas—draw on Barclay, Bevan, & Co.; Branch of London and County Joint-Stock Banking Co.—draw on head office, 21 Lombard Street.—Inns: Bell and Red Lion; George Hotel. — East Hyde Park, the seat of Levi Ames, Esq., is situated about three miles from the town; Stockwood Park, also a fine domain, is the seat of Samuel Crawley, Esq.

LUTON, BEDFORD, a town in the above parish. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — Contains 768 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,555.

LUTTERWORTH, LEICESTER, a parish and market town in the hun^d. of Guthlaxton, union of Lutterworth: 97 miles from London (coach road 89), 8 from Rugby. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Ullesthorpe, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Leicester to Ullesthorpe, &c., 44 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. — The town is pleasantly situate on the banks of the small river Swift, over which there is a bridge, built by subscription in 1778. The streets are regular and well-paved, and much improvement has of late years been made in their appearance, by the substitution of new erections in place of the old structures of two or three centuries gone by. The chief manufactures are those of the whole of this district — ribbons and hosiery. Lutterworth was formerly noted for the vassalage of its inhabitants; and even as late as the year 1758, they were obliged to grind their corn at one mill, and their wheat at another. This odious remnant of feudal tyranny was at last set aside by a legal decree; and though several attempts were made, on different counts, to restore the privilege to the proprietors of the ancient mills, they proved ultimately altogether abortive through the spirit of the inhabitants. The parish church is a large and handsome building, with a nave, two aisles, a chancel, and a tower. John Wickliffe, the great and intrepid champion, who dared, in the full plenitude of papal supremacy, to dispute and gainsay the domination of superstitious selfishness, was presented to this living by King Edward III., and died here in 1387. In common with his great patron, the truly noble Lord Cobham, who was roasted to death for his adherence to the faith, Wickliffe endured much persecution, and though he did not suffer a martyr's fate, he was persecuted even after death, for after his body had lain in the grave for the space of forty-one years, his remains were ordered to be dug up by the Council of Sienna, and after his bones were burnt, through the inveterate spirit of Romanism, they were committed to the passing stream, to be by it distributed to the four winds of heaven, but only so to be re-instituted in the full perfection of that glorious body, when he shall again, in the full plenitude of his personal and mental endowments, meet his defamers at the judgment-bar of God. The church contains also several beautiful monuments; and one to the memory of the great reformer, from the chisel of Mr. Westmacott, junior, has lately been erected in the chancel. A neat tablet of white marble records the virtues of the late excellent Bishop Ryder, who was at one time the rector of this parish. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. A free school was endowed here in 1730, by the Rev. Edward Sherrier, through the medium of which 100 boys are educated; the founder also leaving sufficient funds for paying four poor almsmen 7s. each weekly.

In 1815, also, Bishop Ryder founded and endowed a school for the instruction of poor girls in the elementary branches of book education, and in needlework, and other necessary domestic arts. The other town charities produce about £312 a year, a considerable portion of which is applied to parochial purposes. A court-leet is held by the lord of the manor, sometimes in January, and sometimes in October, at which two persons are chosen for town masters, and who have the sole care of the town lands, which produce about £240, which is chiefly applied to paving and improving the streets. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here. The Lutterworth poor-law union comprises thirty-six parishes, with a population of about 15,000 persons, spread over 87 square miles. — The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £26: pres. net income, £585: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, R. H. Johnson, 1816: contains 1,890 acres: 485 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,531: probable popⁿ in 1849, 2,911: ass^d prop^r £7,753: poor rates in 1838, £479. 13s. — Market day, Thursday. Fairs: Feb. 16, April 2, Holy-Thursdays, Sept. 16, Feb. 16, for cattle. — Bankers: Branch of Pare's Leicestershire Banking Co. — draw on Smith, Payne, & Co. — Hind Inn, and Denbigh Arms Hotel.

East. Rail. through Ashford to Rye, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 223 miles.---Money orders issued at New Romney: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m.---The ancient name of this place was Hlyda, and it formerly partook of the old privileges of the Cinque Ports, being joined with Romney, and possessing, by prescription, a corporation, consisting of a bailiff, jurats, and commonalty, with very extensive powers of jurisdiction; but it has not been included in any of the sections of the municipal act. It was at one time a seaport, as might well have been imagined from the circumstances which have just been stated; but in consequence of the vast accumulation of the shingle on this part of the coast, it now stands at least a mile inland, has irrecoverably lost its old status, and is but a trifling place, though still called a market town. The church is a fine edifice, and of very considerable antiquity. The Independents have a chapel here. The charities produce about £80 a year, the greater part of which is applied to parochial purposes. Dungeness lighthouse, which is 110 feet high, and was built by Mr. James Watt, on the model of Eddystone, stands on the extreme headland seaward of Lydd, and is a very valuable aid to the navigation of the English Channel, both eastward and westward of the point on which it has been erected.---The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £55. 12s. 1d.: pres. net income, £1,247: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, C. LYDFORD (or LIDFORD), DEVON, a parish in the hun^d of Lifton, union of Tavistock, on the river Lydd: 239 miles from London (coach road 204), 8 from Tavistock, 9 from Oakhampton.---Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Newton station, thence 25 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 253 miles.---Money orders issued at Tavistock: London letters deliv^d. 11½ a.m.: post closes 1 p.m.---A town, under the name of Lyghatford, existed here long prior to the Norman Conquest, and was of considerable size, until it was almost entirely destroyed by the Danes in 997. By the time of the accession of William I. in 1066, it had recovered so much of its former consequence, as to be taxed by him equally with London. In 1238, Richard, Earl of Cornwall, obtained a grant of the forest of Dartmoor, and the castle of Lydford, and about twenty years after that time, a weekly market and an annual fair were established; and twice during the reign of Edward I. the town sent representatives to parliament. Situated in the centre of a large mining district, Lydford early became a mart for tin, and money was coined here, while the castle became alike the scene of operations and the prison of the Stannary Court, one of the most detestable engines of legal power which was ever used in this country, and which the infamous Judge Jeffreys turned to fearful account. Among other instances of its depraved exercise of authority, it assumed the right of trying and confining, in 1512, Richard Strood, Esq., one of the parliamentary representatives of Plympton, ostensibly for a breach of the Stannary laws, but in reality for saying that the waters from the mines injured Plymouth harbour. Lydford law was proverbial for its harshness as late even as the end of the last century, and William Browne, one of Shakspeare's contemporaries, who lived when it was in nearly the full exercise of its power, says of it—

"I oft have heard of Lydforde lawe,
Howe in the morne they hang and drawe,
And sit in judgment after."

Some portion of the walls of the castle still remain. The vast compass of the parish comprises the romantic and varied waste of Dartmoor, now about to be brought into partial cultivation; and it also contains several very fine cascades, especially that of the Lid, amid its beautiful and picturesque scenery. The living (St. Petrock), a rectory in the archd^y of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £15. 13s. 9d.: pres. net income, £160: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, J. R. LYME-REGIS, DORSET, a parish, borough, and market town, within the boundaries of, although possessing separate jurisdiction from, the liberty of Loders and Bothenhampton, union of Axminster, Bridport division of the county, on the shore of the English Channel: 163 miles from London (coach road 143), 9 from Bridport.—Sou. West. Rail. through Southampton to Dorchester, thence 22 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, Reading, Southampton, &c., 252 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m.—Lyme is situated on the little river Lyme, from which it derives its name, on the extreme borders of Devonshire, on the West Bay, in a cavity between two rocky hills; its situation on a declivity making part of it exceedingly difficult of access, and yet another part lies so low that, during high tides, the cellars in that portion are frequently inundated to the depth of 10 or 12 feet. The houses, which are somewhat irregularly placed, are constructed of a bluish ragstone, and generally covered with slate. The river, which rises above Up-Lyme, runs through the middle of the town on a bed of rocks, dividing it into two parts, and then falls into the sea near Cobb-Gate. The earliest historical account which we have of Lyme, is in the time of Cenwulf, king of the West Saxons, who granted certain privileges for the sustenance of the church; but in the Domesday survey we have a distinct intimation, that it was at that time divided into three parts, one of which belonged to the Bishop of Salisbury, another to the abbey of Glastonbury, and the third to William Belet. Edward I. granted to it the privileges of a borough, and it was made by him part of the dower of his sister, the Queen of Scotland, and from that time it grew in dignity and importance, providing as many as four vessels and sixty-two men towards the siege of Calais; it shortly afterwards, however, declined. During the civil wars, Lyme remained steadfast to the parliament, and stood a siege by Prince Maurice. In 1558, it witnessed the first engagement which took place between the Spanish armada and the English fleet; and, in 1672, a naval fight took place off the coast here, between the English and the Dutch, in which the latter were defeated. The town is also celebrated as having been the first scene of the unsuccessful rebellion of the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth. In 1668, Lyme was the birth-place of Mr. Thomas Coram, the projector of the Foundling Hospital, and also of Admiral Summers, who discovered the island of Bermuda. The great Cosmo de Medici died here in 1669, while on his visit to England.

The commerce of Lyme appears to have varied very much at different periods; but it was certainly much greater at one time than it is now, for about sixty years ago the customs duties amounted to £16,000 a year, but now they do not reach a fifth of that sum, notwithstanding the increase of the population, and the increase of the number of rateable articles. The harbour consists of two artificial piers, which enclose a basin. One of these is called Cobb, and was originally built as early as the reign of Edward III. The harbour is chiefly valuable as a port of refuge in bad weather for small vessels. The church is a handsome structure, built chiefly in the later English and decorated styles of architecture; it consists of a nave, choir, and two side aisles; over the entrance there is an apartment which is used as a school-room. Two almshouses were built here in 1548, by Mr. John Tudbolt, mayor, for four poor families; the other charities produce about £35 a year. As stated above, Lyme received certain privileges from James I., but it was not fully invested with all its prescriptive and chartered rights, until the thirty-third year of Elizabeth, when its incorporation was completed. Under the Municipal Act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors, under the usual corporate style; the new parliamentary boundaries comprising the whole of the parish and the adjoining parish of Charmonth. Lyme continued to send two members to parliament, from the twenty-third year of Edward I. till the passing of the Reform Act, when it was restricted to only one. The living (St. Michael), a disch^d. vicarage in the diocese of Sarum, is valued at £10. 5s. 7^d.: pres. net income, £275: patron, Prebendary thereof: pres. incumbent, F. P. Hodges, 1833: contains 1,190 acres: 423 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,756: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,169: ass^d prop^y £5,351. Market days, Tuesday and Friday. Fairs: Feb. 13, and Oct. 2. Bankers: R. & H. The living (the Virgin Mary and St. Eadburgh), a rectory and vicarage in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £21. 10s.: pres. net income, £625: patron, Rev. Ralph Price: pres. incumbent, Ralph Price, 1811: contains 4,320 acres: 105 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 941: ass^d prop^y £3,569: poor rates in 1837, £332. 14s. Fair, July 6, for pedlery.

LYMINGTON, HAMPS, a parochial liberty, borough, seaport, and market town, in the parish of Boldre, east division of the New Forest, union of Lymington, situated on the west bank of the Lymington river: 100 miles from London (coach road 88), 16 from Southampton. Sou. West. Rail. through Southampton to Brockenhurst station, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Rugby,

Oxford, Reading, Southampton, &c., 189 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4.20 p.m.: post closes 10 a.m. The earliest notice of this place occurs in the Domesday-book, in which it is called Lentune, or Liniatun, of which its present name is merely a corruption; but it rose into no importance until the time of Henry I., when it was made a port for the importation of French wines and other foreign commodities, and also became celebrated for its salt-works. In the twentieth of Edward III., this port contributed 9 ships and 159 men towards the fleet for the protection of the southern coast, which was more, by 4 ships and 63 men, than the quota contributed by Portsmouth. At that time, and long subsequently, the inhabitants of Lymington levied certain duties on articles imported from abroad; but this was a fiscal right disputed by the authorities of the superior port of Southampton, and ultimately, after legal process, assigned to it, although pertinaciously persisted in by the inhabitants of this place, and frequently to their cost. At length, however, being, in the year 1730, sued by the mayor and corporation of Southampton, the defendants procured the removal of the cause to the county assize court, when a verdict was given in their favour, and the petty customs have in consequence ever since been levied here. In 1731, however, the trade of Lymington was seriously affected by the construction of a coffer-dam, which had the effect of reducing the depth of the waters of the port, so that, while vessels of 500 tons burthen could formerly approach the town, none larger than 300 tons could anchor in the harbour afterwards. Perhaps this was not of so much consequence as it would have been, had Lymington been open to foreign commerce, but none but coasting vessels are now allowed to discharge their cargoes here. The town is situated on the western bank of a creek or river, which falls into the Solent Channel, and consists principally of one street, nearly half a mile in length. Excellent accommodations have been provided for sea-bathing, and these, combined with the several attractions of the town and neighbourhood, have caused Lymington to be a place of very favourite resort during the summer months. The trade of Lymington consists principally in the exportation of salt, bricks, timber, and brooms, and in the importation of corn, coal, and stone. The custom-house is in Quay Street, but the only duties receivable here are those on coal and slate. There was formerly a considerable business done here in the manufacture of salt for the table, as well also as of the medicinal alkali which commonly goes under the name of Epsom salts—the works for the making of which are situated along the sea-shore; but Liverpool and other enterprising places have now assumed the greater part of this business. Lymington has always been a useful port, and it is no uncommon sight to see, in the winter-time, from forty to fifty vessels at anchor at one time, waiting for a fair wind, and paying only a few shillings for harbour dues. The harbour at the bottom of the creek is excellent, and affords admirable shelter in bad weather for the fine vessels belonging to the gentlemen of the Royal Yacht Squadron. A grammar-school was founded and endowed at Lymington in 1668, by Mr. George Fulford of Fulford, in Devonshire, who devised lands for that purpose; and, in 1688, a school-house was granted by the corporation, which, becoming dilapidated, was taken down in 1782; about ten boys are instructed gratuitously on the foundation. In 1777, a bequest was made by Mrs. Anne Burrard for the endowment of another school, in which ten boys and ten girls are constantly instructed; and Admiral Thomas Rogers, who died in 1814, bequeathed £1,000 to the parish, directing that the interest should be divided equally amongst ten poor men and women. The other charities are numerous, but of no great aggregate amount. The elective franchise was conferred by Queen Elizabeth, and has continued in exercise ever since, the only alteration made by the Parliamentary Reform Act being to enlarge the boundaries of the borough. Lymington is one of the polling-places for the southern division of the county. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Baptists, all have chapels here. On a neck of land or bank, to the south-west of Lymington, is Hurst Castle, a strongly-built fortress, erected by Henry VIII. to defend this part of the channel between the main-land and the Isle of Wight. It consists of a circular tower, defended by circular bastions. In this castle Charles I. was confined previous to his removal to Carisbrooke Castle in 1648, about a month previous to his decapitation. It is now an important station, held by men in the Preventive service, and two lighthouses and a beacon are placed here for the benefit of vessels navigating along the coast. Admiral Lord Hawke resided for several years at Grove House, where several of his children were born; and Dr. Guidott, who revived the drinking of the Bath waters, was a native of this place. The living (St. Thomas) is a curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Boldre, in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester: contains 1,670 acres: 659 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,813: probable popⁿ in 1849, 4,385: ass^d prop^r £5,316: poor rates in 1837, £1,603. 12s. LYMM (or LYMN), CHESTER, a parish and village in the hun^d of Bucklow, union of Altringham, south of the river Mersey, and crossed by the Duke of Bridgewater's Canal: 187 miles from London, 5 from Warrington, 7 from Nether-Knutsford. Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe to Warrington, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 87 miles. Money orders issued at Warrington: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. The church is a very ancient structure, and there is also a very ancient cross here. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. A grammar-school was endowed here in 1698, by Sir George Warburton, and W. Domville, Esq., the income of which is about £80 a year. The living (the Virgin Mary), a rectory in mediocrities, in the archd^y and diocese of Chester: the mediocrities of Lymm with Warburton is valued at £11. 0s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £249: contains 4,840 acres: 442 houses:

popⁿ in 1841, 2,658: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,056: ass^d prop^r £10,218: poor rates in 1838, £947. 18s. Lymm Hall is the seat of the Rev. Mascie Domville Taylor.

LYMPNE (or LAMNE), KENT, a parish, partly situated within the liberty of Romney-Marsh, and partly in the hun^d of Street, lathe of Shepway, union of Elham, intersected by the Royal Military Canal: 78 miles from London, 3 from Hythe. Sou. East. Rail. to Westernhanger station, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 210 miles. Money orders issued at Hythe: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. The church stands on the edge of a rock near the village, and is principally in the Norman style of architecture, with a tower rising from the centre. The parish takes its name from the ancient river Limene, now called the Rother, a branch of which ran below it, and formed the Roman haven, called Portus Lemanus. The great military road, called Stane Street, which is still perceptibly straight for several miles, ran hither from Durovernum, the site of Canterbury. Formerly, at Shepway Cross, which is about half a mile from the church, the Limanarcha, or Warden of the Cinque Ports, was sworn in. A school here has a small endowment, and there is also a small almshouse here. At a short distance from the church is Stutfall Castle, now the residence of the Archdeacon of Canterbury, but formerly a stronghold or fort of the Romans; the walls are constructed of brick and flint. Several Roman coins have been found in the neighbourhood. About the year 633, Ethelburga, a daughter of King Ethelbert, built a nunnery here in honour of the Virgin Mary, which subsequently became an abbey, and existed until about 964; but after the Danish invasion, it came into the possession of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The living (St. Stephen), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £9. 1s. 4d.: pres. net income, £183: patron, Archdeacon of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, Edin Biron, 1840: contains 2,200 acres: 64 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 606: ass^d prop^r £3,954: poor rates in 1838, £305. 6s.

LYMPSHAM, SOMERSET, a parish in the hun^d of Brent with Wrington, union of Axbridge, on the river Axe: 143 miles from London, 6 from Axbridge. Gt. West. The church, which is in the later English style, was erected in 1831, at an expense of about £5,700. There is an hospital here for idiots, which is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene; it has a chapel annexed, which, within these few years, was rebuilt by public subscription.—The living (Thomas & Becket) is a vicarage, with St. Mark's church, St. Matthew's church, and Dolmead chapel, annexed to the rectory of St. Peter and St. Paul, Bath: pres. net income, £750: patron, Trustees of Rev. C. Simeon: pres. incumbent, Hon. W. J. Brodrick, 1839: contains 1,700 acres: 136 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 9,920: probable popⁿ in 1849, 11,270: ass^d prop^y £18,546: poor rates in 1838, £2,681. 16s.

LYNDHURST, HANTS, a parish in the New Forest hund^l and union, New Forest division of the county: 89 miles from London (coach road 83), 8 from Southampton.—Sou. West. Rail. through Southampton to Lyndhurst Road station, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, Reading, Southampton, &c., 178 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 9 p.m.—Prior to the time of Charles II., the jurisdiction of the chief-justice in Eyre for this forest was exercised here, where the forest courts, under the authority of the verderors, are still held; one annually on September 14, and others as the judges may appoint. A house, called the King's House, is attached to the wardenship, at which a stirrup is preserved, said to be one worn by William Rufus, when he was shot by Sir Walter Tyrrel. A school here, in which sixteen children are instructed, is endowed with £26 a year, through a bequest of William Phillips, Esq. It is from this place that Lord Lyndhurst takes his title. His lordship, Sir John Singleton Copley, whose father attained great eminence as a painter, and was elected a member of the Royal Academy, having been one of the most distinguished men in his profession as a barrister, speedily attained to all the highest legal offices, was solicitor and attorney-general, master of the rolls, and ultimately, on the retirement of the Earl of Eldon, was constituted lord chancellor, and obtained his peerage. His lordship, after being chief baron of the Exchequer, subsequently twice filled the same lofty position. The church of Lyndhurst is a small edifice; it was rebuilt in 1710 by George I., and in connection with it there are charities of the value of about £14 a year. The Baptists have a chapel here. Petty sessions are held at Lyndhurst, on the first Wednesday in every month. There are several finely-timbered parks in the neighbourhood, which are laid out with great taste and judgment.—The living (St. Michael) is a curacy, annexed to the rectory of Minstead: contains 3,560 acres: 219 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,386: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,694: ass^d prop^y £3,285: poor rates in 1838, £343. 18s.—Cuffnells is the seat of Sir Edward Poore, Bart., situated near the centre of the New Forest; it possesses many peculiar advantages of scenery, and its bold irregularity of surface, finely adorned with majestic oaks and noble beech trees, present some beautiful landscape effects. The mansion stands on a rising ground embosomed in trees, and possesses all the characteristics of an English gentleman's residence. It was some few years ago the residence of Sir George Rose, who was twice here honoured with visits from King George III. and his Queen Charlotte. The house contains many handsome apartments, and is embellished with some remarkably fine portraits of the great men of the present and past age. Sir Edward, who is an officer in the army, derives his descent from Philip Poer of Ambresbury, elder brother of Richard Poore, Bishop of Durham, who laid the foundation of Salisbury cathedral, and died in 1237. From him was descended, throughout this long series of ages, John Methuen Poore, Esq., who was created a baronet in 1795, and was high sheriff of Wiltshire in 1797. The present baronet succeeded to the title and estates in 1838, on the death of his father.—Holly Mount is the seat of John Blagrove Bulley, Esq.; Newpark is the seat of Colonel Thornhill; Foxlease, of James Mactaggart, Esq.; Glasshays, of the Duc de Stacpool; and the Queen's House, of Thomas White, Esq. Besides these gentlemen, Captain Sir Charles Barrard, Bart., R.N.; the Dowager Countess Erroll, Captain Breton, and Colonel Hogg, have residences here.

LYNN (NORTH), NORFOLK, a parish and rectory in the Marshland division of the hun^d of Freebridge, union of King's-Lynn, on the western bank of the Ouse, near its mouth, and has suffered frequently from inundations in that river, one of which swept away the church: 97 miles from London, 1 from Lynn-Regis, 16 from Swaffham. — (For access, &c., see LYNN.) — Money orders issued at Lynn: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — The living is a rectory in the archd^y of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, with the perpetual curacies of St. Margaret and St. Nicholas: patron, Dean and Chapter of Norwich: pres. incumbent, R. E. Hankinson, 1847: contains 1,080 acres: 8 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 38: poor rates in 1838, £27. Tithes commuted in 1837.

LYNN-REGIS (or KING'S-LYNN), NORFOLK, a borough, seaport, and market town, having exclusive jurisdiction, though locally situated in the hun^d of Freebridge-Lynn, union of King's-Lynn, at the mouth of the Great Ouse river, on its eastern bank: 96 miles from London, 42 from Norwich. — Nor. and East. Co^t. Rail. to Lynn station, 115 miles: from Derby, through Syston and Peterborough to Lynn, 121 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m. and 4¼ p.m.: post closes 6 p.m. and 8 a.m. — This place, in Camden's opinion, was an ancient British town, and derived its name from the old term Lyn, which was used to indicate a wide expanse of water, which is very significant of its real situation; but Spelman, whose opinion is always of value, conceived that its name is of Saxon origin, being derived from the word Leam, meaning a tenure in fee or farm; and it is certain that it was anciently called Len Episcopi, or Bishop's Lynn, from having been under the jurisdiction, both temporal and spiritual, of the Bishops of Norwich, who had a palace where Gaywood Hall now stands. During the reign, however, of Henry VIII., the ecclesiastics surrendered their authority to the king, and it has ever since been called Lenne-Regis, or "King's-Lynn." During the contest between John and the barons, Lynn remained faithful to the king, who, on the petition of John Grey, bishop of Norwich, made it a free borough, and presented to the inhabitants a silver cup, richly gilt and beautifully enamelled, weighing seventy-three ounces, which is still preserved by the corporation. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, the corporate authorities were remarkably active in persecuting and burning the poor old unhappy creatures who were stigmatized as witches; and Hopkins, the brute of infamous notoriety, who was for some time the main agent in this diabolical cruelty, found in Lynn and its neighbourhood abundant work for himself, especially as very little proof was necessary of the guilt of those accused after his denunciation. During the civil war, Lynn was garrisoned for Charles I., and suffered a siege of three weeks by the parliamentary forces before it capitulated to the Earl of Manchester, by whom a capitation assessment of ten shillings per head was levied, amounting to £3,200, before it could be preserved from plunder. The river, on which the town is pleasantly situated, is here of great breadth, Lynn standing about ten miles from the North Sea: it extends about a mile and a quarter in length, and about a mile in breadth, and is intersected by four rivulets, locally called fleets, over which there are numerous bridges, some of them being wide enough for the passage of carriages. The town consists of three principal streets, nearly parallel with each other, from which several smaller streets diverge; it is well paved, lighted with gas, and well supplied with water, conveyed through iron pipes, laid down from the reservoir at Kettle Mills, in the north-eastern suburb. The houses have mostly an old and antique aspect, but still there are several modern erections interspersed, and in some parts handsome ranges of dwellings built, within these last few years, more in accordance with our present notions of taste and comfort. This borough contains the parishes of South Lynn All Saints, and Lynn St. Margaret's, the latter of which includes the wards of Chequer, Jew's-lane, Kettlewell, New-conduit, North-end, Paradise, Sedgeford-lane, Stone-gate, and Trinity-hall. The living of St. Margaret's is a perpetual curacy, with that of St. Nicholas, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich: gross income, £138: in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Norwich. The church was founded about the beginning of the 12th century, and, though curtailed of its original dimensions, is still a noble pile. It is chiefly built of freestone, and has a nave, chancel, aisles, transept, and two fine towers, 86 feet in height, at the west end. The chapel of St. Nicholas, one of the handsomest and most spacious in the kingdom, is a chapel-of-ease to St. Margaret's, erected in the 14th century: it is in the Gothic style. The church of All Saints is an ancient cruciform structure: the living is a vicarage in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich: rated at £18. 6s. 8d.: gross income, £136: in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. Numerous religious houses formerly existed here, but few remains of them are now visible. The Lady's chapel is an octagonal tower, standing on a conical mount, east of the town, called the Red Mount, probably a corruption of the Rood Mount, and formerly used for military as well as ecclesiastical purposes. Here are Baptist, Independent, and Wesleyan Methodist chapels; the Unitarians, the Society of Friends, and the Roman Catholics, have also places of worship in the town. Lynn was early celebrated for its trading importance, which, indeed, was such, that in the 13th century the revenue paid to the Crown from the customs dues, was more than two-thirds of that received from London. The limits of the port extend, in a northerly direction, from the promontory on which Hunstanton lighthouse stands, in a supposed right line north-north-west, to 14 fathoms of water; and likewise from this line towards the east, until it falls in 14 fathoms of water at a point northward from the eastern end of the sand-hills, commonly called Burnham Meales; southerly, to a place in the channel of the harbour of Lyme, called White Friars Fleet, and to Gibbon's Point, opposite to it; thence down the river on the western side, and round the coast of Marshland to a point called Sutton Corner. The harbour is deep, and sufficient to accommodate 300 sail of vessels at a time; but the entrance is somewhat dangerous, from the frequent shifting of the channel, and the numerous sand-banks; and the anchorage is rendered difficult from the nature of the soil and the rapidity of the tide, which rises to the height of twenty feet. Of late years, many improvements have been made in the river and in the harbour, by the formation of quays, jetties, and other necessary conveniences, for the shipping and landing of merchandise. To remedy the inconvenience which had been sustained by the silting of the harbour, through the formation of the Bedford Level, a new cut was made from the river Ouse, called the Ewbrink Cut, with a view to divert the stream from the eastern, or harbour side; and near the north end of it, a handsome wooden bridge has been built, which leads into Marshland. In addition to this, a bridge over the river Nene, and an embankment at Cross Keys Wash, affording a direct road from Norfolk and Suffolk through Lynn into Lincolnshire, was completed in 1831. The Purfleet, and common Staith quays, are the principal places for landing merchandise. On the former, where all foreign wines are landed, stands the Custom-house and Exchange, occupying the site of the ancient guild of the Holy Trinity. The Excise-office stands in High Street. Lynn, from its situation near the North Sea, and from the enjoyment of an extensive inland communication by road, railway, and canal, has obtained an extensive foreign and coasting trade. Its principal imports from abroad are—wine from Spain and Portugal; timber, deals, hemp, and tallow from the Baltic; corn from Dantzic, Riga, and other localities on that part of the continent; oil-cake from Holland; and timber, of various kinds, from America. The coasting trade is more considerable even than that with foreign countries, and consists chiefly in the importations from abroad, and agricultural produce, with which the surrounding district is supplied. Shipbuilding to some extent is still carried on in Lynn. The only other branches of manufactures here are those necessary for the supply of sea stores, such as sailcloth, rope, and similar materials. A new market-house has lately been erected, with a range of six Doric columns forming an entrance, above which there is a handsome Ionic colonnade supporting a pediment. The upper part of the building contains a spacious room for exhibitions, public meetings, and other similar purposes; beneath there is an area, which leads to a space where the fish-market is held. The town, which, under the bishops, was governed by a provost appointed by them, was first incorporated by John. Under the new general municipal act, a commission of the peace has been granted, and six justices have been appointed; the court of quarter sessions has also been established. The borough is now divided into three wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen common councillors, under the usual corporate style; the income of the borough is about £8,900 a year. The free grammar-school of Lynn was founded in the reign of Edward IV. or Henry VII., for the instruction of the sons of freemen in the Latin and Greek classics, but there are seldom more than one or two free scholars. There are several university exhibitions for the pupils of this school, but most of them are of minor value. To enumerate the several charities would be beyond our limits, and it may therefore suffice to state, that Gaywood's Charity, an hospital founded before the Reformation, has an income of £357. 10s. per annum; Framingham's Hospital has £332 per annum; and St. James' Hospital has £274 per annum, all of them being under the trusteeship of the corporation. Lynn returns two members to parliament. Lynn poor-law union comprises four parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons, spread over an area of nine square miles. Nicholas of Lynn, a celebrated mathematician, astrologer, and navigator, was born here, and became one of the Grey friars; he also died, and was buried here, in 1639. William Browne, M.D., afterwards Sir William Browne, resided here; he was President of the College of Physicians, and author of several works, chiefly on medical subjects. The custom of ushering in May-day by the blowing of horns, is still observed at Lynn. The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the archd^y of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £18. 6s. 8u.: pres. net income, £134: patron, Bishop of Ely: pres. incumbent, T. B. Greaves, 1811: contains 2,620 acres: 2,707 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 16,039: probable popⁿ in 1849, 18,445: ass^d prop^r £26,180: poor rates in 1838, £5,978. 14s. Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs: Feb. 14, for cheese, and Oct. 17. LYNN (West), NORFOLK, a parish in the Marshland division of the hun^d of Freebridge, union of King's-Lynn: 97 miles from London, 1 from Lynn-Regis, 16 from Swaffham. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £9: pres. net income, £493: patron, Rev. C. H. Townsend: pres. incumbent, J. Bowen, 1830: contains 1,710 acres: 15 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 477: ass^d prop^r £4,504: poor rates in 1838, £163. 8s.

LYNT, WILTS, a tithing in the parish of Colcehill: 75 miles from London, 2 from Highworth, 7 from Cricklade. (Popⁿ returned with the parish.)

LYNTON, DEVON, a parish in the hun^d of Shirwell, union of Barnstaple, at the mouth of the Lynn: the parish comprises the villages of Lynton and Lynmouth: 222 miles from London (coach road 185), 18 from Minehead, 18 from Barnstaple. Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol to Tiverton, thence 38 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Bristol, &c., 228 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 11½ a.m.: post closes 1 p.m. This place is much frequented during the summer season for sea-bathing, and many excellent houses have been erected for the accommodation of visitors. The view from the churchyard is singularly beautiful. There is an Independent chapel here. A pier has been erected for the accommodation of vessels engaged in the coasting trade, and for the fishermen, whose takes are chiefly shipped for Bristol and other places. The lord of the manor holds an annual court-leet, when a portreeve, a tithing-man, and an ale-taster, are appointed. The views in the parish are exceedingly picturesque, comprising the rocky coasts of the Bristol Channel, and the far-off shores of Wales. About a mile west of Lynton there is an extraordinary tract of scenery, called the Valley of Rocks. It is about half a mile in length, but not above a hundred yards in width, and is bounded by great fragments of rocks, piled one upon another; the elevations on each side being of mountainous height, and the masses of stone upon the summit forming rude natural columns fantastically arranged, so that they resemble the ruins of ancient buildings; and vast fragments of rock overspread the valley in every direction. The living, a perpetual curacy, with the parish of Countisbury, in the archd^y of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, not in charge: pres. net income, £120: patron, Archdeacon of Barnstaple: pres. incumbent, Matt. Mundy, 1832: contains 7,160 acres: 153 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,027: ass^d prop^r £1,987: poor rates in 1838, £281. 7s. Tithes commuted in 1839. The following gentlemen have residences at Lynton:—Edward Ayshford Sanford, Esq., of Nynhead Court, Somerset; Colonel John Dawson Rawdon, M.P.; Major-General Sir William L. Herries; and the Rev. Henry Horace Hayes;—and in the parish of Countisbury, the Rev. Walter S. Halliday, at Glenthorne and Watersmeet; and the Rev. Thomas Roe, at Lynmouth. These are all beautifully situated; and Mr. Sanford, Sir William Herries, and Mr. Halliday, kindly allow their grounds to be shown to visitors.

LYONSHALL (or LEONHALES), HEREFORD, a parish in the hun^d of Stretford, union of Kington: 153 miles from London (coach road 149), 3 from Kington, 7 from Weobley. Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 35 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Worcester, &c., 106 miles. Money orders issued at Kington: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. This parish is bounded on the north by the river Avon. There are the remains here of an old moated castle, which, in the early part of the reign of Henry III., belonged to Sir Stephen de Ebroucis, then lord of the manor and castle, and on the site of which a curious antique ring was found. The living, a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £6. 10s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £350: patron, Bishop of Hereford: pres. incumbent, John Randall, 1826: contains 4,650 acres: 165 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 912: ass^d prop^r £6,355: poor rates in 1838, £296. 16s.

LYTHAM, LANCASTER, a parish and village in the hund of Amounderness, union of Fylde, on the northern bank of the estuary of the Ribble: 237 miles from London (coach road 230), 13 from Preston, 5 from Kirkham. — Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Preston to Lytham station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 137 miles. — Money orders issued at Preston: London letters deliv^d 10½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. — This parish, which is situated on the northern shore of the estuary of the Ribble, is much frequented for sea-bathing, and of late years many improvements have been made in the place, to meet the more refined requirements of the visitors. Handsome hotels have been opened; a billiard-room has been erected; and part of the beach has been levelled to form a promenade, which is exceedingly pleasing, and commands many delightful views of the country on the southern side of the estuary. Within the last few years the church has been rebuilt in the later style of English architecture, and is now a very beautiful object. About a mile eastward of the town is Lytham Pool, a large natural basin, where vessels bringing corn, or other commodities, to the port of Preston, discharge their cargoes into smaller craft; at its northern extremity there is a graving dock for the building and repairing of vessels. Some few of the inhabitants of Lytham are engaged in fishing. A free school here is endowed, from various benefactions, with an income of about £104 a year. — The living (St. Cuthbert), a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Manchester, is valued at £22: pres. net income, £131: patron, T. Clifton, Esq.: pres. incumbent, R. B. Robinson, 1834: contains 5,240 acres: 268 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,082: probable popⁿ in 1849, 2,394: ass^d prop^y £6,944: poor rates in 1838, £352. 5s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — Fairs: July 8, for wool. — Lytham Hall, the seat of Thomas Clifton, Esq., a large benefactor to the new church, comprises, in its kitchen and out-offices, a portion of the buildings of a Benedictine priory, founded as a cell to the monastery of Durham, by Richard Fitz-Roger, in the latter part of the reign of Richard I.: it was dissolved with the smaller monasteries, by Henry VIII.

LYTHAM'S (St.), GLAMORGAN, a parish in the hund of Dinas-Powis, union of Cardiff: 175 miles from London (coach road 166), 6 from Cardiff, 6 from Llandaff. — Gt. West. MABYN (St.), CORNWALL, a parish in the hun^d. of Trigg, union of Bodmin: 271 miles from London (coach road 237), 5 from Bodmin, 9 from Camelford. — Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 27 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 285 miles. — Money orders issued at Bodmin: London letters deliv^d. 1½ p.m.: post closes 11 a.m. The church is a handsome structure, with a lofty square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles. It was repaired, and entirely repewed, at the sole expense of the late rector, the Rev. G. L. Gower. There is a Wesleyan chapel in the village. An almshouse, for seven poor families, was erected here at an expense of £200, the accumulated bequest of £100 from William Parker, Esq. The Rev. C. Peters, author of a volume of Sermons, and of a Dissertation on the Book of Job, was for some time rector of this parish. — The living, a rectory in the archd^r. of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £36: pres. net income, £712: patron, Earl of Falmouth: pres. incumbent, G. H. Somerset, 1842: contains 3,570 acres: 149 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 870: ass^d. prop^r £6,051: poor rates in 1838, £411. 12s. — Fair, Feb. 14.

MACCLESFIELD (or MAXFIELD), CHESTER, a parochial chapelry, borough, and market town, in the hun^d. and union of Macclesfield, on the river Bollin, near its source: 178 miles from London (coach road 167), 12 from Stockport. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Leicester, Burton, and Leek, to Macclesfield station: from Derby, through Burton, Leek, &c., 56 miles. — Money orders issued at Macclesfield: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — Previously to the Norman Conquest, this place constituted a portion of the demesne of the Earls of Mercia, who held a court here for the ancient hundred of Hameston; and hence, in the Domesday Book, it is represented as having been one of the seats of Earl Edwin. When that survey of William was made, it was comprised within the earldom of Chester, of which it continued to form a part until that jurisdiction was abolished, when the hundred, manor, and forest of Macclesfield lapsed to the Crown, and the sovereign is now consequently lord of the hundred; about one-third of which, including the township of Macclesfield, and sixteen other townships, constitute the manor and forest of Macclesfield. The forest was anciently entitled to the same rights, and protected by the same laws, as the other royal forests; but some of the laws have expired with the disafforestation of the tract to which they applied, but a few of the old officers are still retained, although, since the abolition of the feudal system, their services have not been required. When this territory lapsed to the Crown, parcels of the forest were granted away, and the whole of it has for some years past been brought under cultivation. During the great civil war, Macclesfield was held for the king, but was taken, after an obstinate defence, by the parliamentarians under Sir William Brereton, who was the commander of the county, by whom it was retained, notwithstanding a very gallant attempt made by Sir Thomas Acton to drive him out. On a hill eastward of the town, there are the vestiges of the parliamentary encampment. On Charles II.'s attempt to regain the British crown, the men of Macclesfield entered into his cause with enthusiasm, and it was determined to raise four regiments, of 700 men each, for his service. Macclesfield is situated on the acclivity of a steep hill, near the borders of the district still called Macclesfield Forest. The little river Bollin, running through "the Water" in the lowest part of the town, is crossed by several bridges, which unite the habitations on both banks. The town consists chiefly of four principal streets, which contain many houses of a very superior order. The streets are well paved and lighted with gas, and the town is well supplied with water, conveyed through pipes from a neighbouring common. The road from London by Leek to Stockport, passes through one of the principal streets. There is an open market-place in the northern part of the town, where the church stands. There is hardly a section of the dissenting community which has not one or more chapels here. A free grammar-school was founded here in the time of Edward VI., by Sir John Percyval, who became lord mayor of London; its endowment exceeds £800 per annum, but what is done with the amount does not very clearly appear. An almshouse was endowed in 1703, by Mrs. Stanley, with £6 per annum, and there are several other minor charities for clothing and apprenticing children. Macclesfield was formerly the centre of an extensive trade in buttons, wrought of silk, mohair, and twist, at one time curiously worked with a needle, and used to trim full-dress suits for parties or the court; and, in order to protect the trade, an act of parliament was passed, inflicting a penalty on the wearing of buttons formed of moulds, covered with the stuff of which the garment was made. An attempt was made, in 1778, to enforce this act, but the skill of the operative soon produced buttons of horn and metal, which evaded both the spirit and the letter of the act, so that the very means used to preserve the then business of the town, proved to be its speedy and certain destruction. The weaving of silk was introduced into Macclesfield about the year 1787. The trade was for a long time confined to the manufacture of grey bandanas, a few romales, and coloured handkerchiefs, but it now comprises every variety of piece goods, its products in this branch being adapted to all circumstances. In addition to the weaving works, there are also bleaching, printing, colouring, and other establishments, necessary to complete the manufacture; and from the town having every means of communication, both for inland and foreign trade, there is little doubt but the prosperity of the place will in future years largely increase. The first extant charter of Macclesfield was granted in the 45th year of Henry III. to Prince Edward, Earl of Chester, and afterwards Edward I., but various other charters were also granted up to the time of Charles II. Under the recent municipal act, the borough is included in schedule A, amongst those to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted. Under the municipal act, Macclesfield is divided into six wards, the government being vested in twelve aldermen, and thirty-six councillors, under the usual corporate style; their public income amounts to about £6,000 per annum. Macclesfield was enfranchised by the Reform Act, and now sends two members to parliament. It is also one of the polling-places for the northern division of the county. The Macclesfield poor-law union comprises 41 parishes, with a population of about 55,000, spread over an area of 102 square miles. MACHYNLLETH, MONTGOMERY, a parish, borough, and market town, in the hun^d and union of Machynlleth, North Wales, on the river Dyfi, or Dovey: the parish is very extensive, and includes, besides the town and liberties of Machynlleth, the townships of Isygarrey and Uchygarrey: 212 miles from London (coach road 206), 25 from Newtown. Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton and Shrewsbury to Newtown, thence 25 miles: from Derby, through Stafford, &c., 127 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 2.40 p.m.: post closes 10 a.m. It was at this place that Owen Glendower exercised his first acts of sovereignty, and where, in 1402, having assembled his parliament, he formally assumed the crown of Wales. The ancient building in which that parliament assembled is still standing. The unfortunate David Gam—the Captain Fluelin of Shakespeare—was imprisoned here by Owen, whose life he intended to take by assassination, but who generously liberated him, on his engaging never again to make a similar attempt, or take up arms against him. To Gam is ascribed the celebrated reply to Henry V., who had sent him to reconnoitre the French forces previous to the battle of Agincourt — "Please your Highness, there are enough to be killed, enough to be taken prisoners, and enough to run away." He himself, poor fellow, was killed during the fight, and lived not to see the victory which his valour had helped to gain. The town of Machynlleth consists chiefly of two spacious streets, which contain many neat and respectable houses; the town-hall and market-house, a neat edifice, occupying a central position. The principal trade of the place consists in the manufacture of coarse webs, woollen cloths, and flannels, which, after the old fashion, are generally made at the workmen's houses, and forwarded to Newtown from the neighbourhood, as to a common depot. Tanning is also carried on to some extent, and in the vicinity there are slate quarries and some lead mines. This place formerly possessed an excellent shipping trade, the river Dovey being navigable as far as within two miles of the town; but since the canal was opened to Newtown, and facilities were amply provided between this part of Wales and the commercial districts, this business has altogether declined, and the carrying trade is chiefly done by barges. Oak-bark and timber form the imports, while corn, coal, and other exports are sent out. Courts leet and baron are convened twice a year, and petty sessions are held on the first Wednesday in every month. Machynlleth, after having been disfranchised for upwards of a century, was restored to its privileges by the Reform Act, and is now a contributory borough with Montgomery. It is also one of the polling-places for the county. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists, all have chapels here. One of the schools here is endowed with the interest of £900 per annum. Mr. Humphrey Morris left seven town-houses, which are inhabited by the poor, rent free; the other charities produce about £12. 10s. per annum. The Machynlleth poor-law union comprises 11 parishes, with a population of about 12,000 persons. — The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the diocese of St. Asaph, is valued at £11. 10s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £230: patron, Bishop of St. Asaph: pres. incumbent, G. MADELEY, SALOP, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Wenlock, union of Madeley, on the banks of the Severn, and intersected by the Shrewsbury Canal: 146 miles from London (coach road 139), 4 from Shifnal, 6 from Wellington. — Nor. West. Rail. through Birmingham and Wolverhampton to Shifnal, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, &c., 75 miles. — Money orders issued at Shiffnall: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. The church is a handsome modern structure. The parish of Madeley extends as far as Coalbrook, so noted for the lofty hills and extensive hanging woods by which it is environed, as well as for the immense iron-works which are there carried on. The iron bridge erected here over the Severn in 1779, which is 100 feet span and 100 feet in height, was the first of the kind cast in England; it forms a beautiful feature in the landscape. At Coalport there is a large manufactory of porcelain or china, and in the parish there are several coal mines, besides springs of petroleum, which were at one time very productive. Near to the entrance to the bridge stands the market-house. The Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. The Madeley poor-law union comprises 12 parishes, with a population of about 22,000, spread over 43 square miles. The Rev. John William Fletcher, a Swiss, so celebrated for his earnest and unaffected piety, was for some time vicar of this parish, died, and was interred here in 1785. The living (St. Michael), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £4. 17s. 10d.: pres. net income, £241: patron, Rev. J. H. A. Gwyther: pres. incumbent, J. Madingley Hall is the seat of Sir St. Vincent Cotton, Bart., whose ancestor inherited it by marriage with the daughter and heiress of Mr. Sergeant Hinde, in the reign of Henry VIII.; and, since that event, this family has generally been distinguished from the other families named Cotton, by the prefix of Hinde. The manor-house is an ancient brick building of the time of Queen Mary or Elizabeth, like Holland House at Kensington. It is nearly surrounded by woods and pleasure-grounds, and from the road has a very picturesque appearance. The house is most handsomely furnished, and is embellished by a number of fine works of art, among which are several historical paintings, and a few portraits, the best of which are those of Sir John Hinde Cotton, Bart., by Sir Godfrey Kneller, and of William Stakeley, Esq., by Walter. The park and pleasure-grounds were very much improved by the late Sir John Hinde Cotton, and the village church, which stands near the mansion, was repaired and ornamented at his expense. Some monuments of the Hinde and Cotton families are contained in the building. Sir St. Vincent Cotton derives his descent from Sir Henry Cotton, Knt., lord of the manor of Cotton Hall, in the county of Cambridge, in the thirteenth century, whose descendant, Sir Thomas Cotton, Knt., married Alice, daughter and heir of John de Hastings of Landwade, in the county of Cambridge, and thus acquired the estate from which the title is derived. The great-grandson of that gentleman, Sir Thomas Cotton, was high sheriff of Cambridgeshire in the sixteenth year of Edward IV. Sir John Cotton, Knt., was high sheriff of the county at the breaking out of the civil war between Charles I. and his parliament, and proclaimed the Earl of Essex a traitor in every market town in the county. He immediately took up arms for his sovereign, and was employed to carry the university plate of Cambridge to the king, then lying at Oxford; a trust which he safely fulfilled. He was created a baronet in 1641, and from him, in a direct line of distinguished ancestry, the present baronet, who was formerly an officer of the 10th Hussars, is descended.

MADLEY, HEREFORD, a parish in the hund^d of Webtree, union of Dore: 147 miles from London (coach road 144), 7 from Hereford, 10 from Weobley. Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse and Gloucester to Ross, thence 15 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 138 miles. Money orders issued at Hereford: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. The charities produce about £27 a year. The living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Tiberton, in the diocese of Hereford, is valued at £16. 1s. 8d.: pres. net income, £608: patron, Dean and Chapter of Hereford: pres. incumbent, J. Merewether, 1844: contains 5,440 acres: 190 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 928: ass^d prop^y £5,930: poor rates in 1838, £389. 7s.

MADRESFIELD, WORCESTER, a parish in the lower division of the hund^d of Pershore, union of Upton-upon-Severn, north-east of the Malvern hills: 125 miles from London (coach road 117), 7 from Worcester, 2 from Malvern. Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Worcester, &c., 78 miles. Money orders issued at Worcester: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. There is a school here endowed with £3 per annum. The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Worcester, is valued at £3. 13s. 11½d.: pres. net income, £230: patron, Earl Beauchamp: pres. incumbent, Charles Hill, 1832: contains 920 acres: 41 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 180: ass^d prop^y £1,495: poor rates in 1838, £58. Madrosfield Court is the seat of the Right Hon. Earl Beauchamp. The mansion is a magnificent alteration of the old baronial castle, and partakes partly of its ancient character of a feudal domain, and partly of a style of modern elegance. Yet, though the alterations have been extensive, its various features carry back the mind to olden times; and its moat, sleeping like a guardian monster around the walls, from the waters of which their foundations spring—its antique bridge and gateway, with its flat Gothic arch, and grated doors, and spandril roof, and deep still silence, conjure up the bygone ages, when these footways were trod by belted knights and boddiced ladies fair, and all the panoply of a Norman lord threw an air of chivalry over everything he ruled. The interior of this fine mansion is appropriately assorted, and very magnificently furnished. The court by which it is approached is irregularly grand, and surrounded by the most antique parts of the old house. A vestibule leads into the hall—a lofty ancient apartment, well preserved, the decaying parts having been restored with considerable taste. Madresfield suffered much in 1646, when it was held for the parliament by the Lygons, but was taken by the royalists, by whom it was retained, until it surrendered, along with Worcester, after the conflict between Cromwell and Charles I.; the latter of whom slept here the night before the fight. The lofty ancient roof is still in good preservation, and a fine warm glow of light is diffused throughout the apartment by the beautiful stained-glass in the windows. The hall is embellished by several large paintings from the Shakspeare Gallery, the subjects of which are well adapted to the scenery around. The drawing-rooms are superb, and the dining-room, which looks into a noble conservatory, beyond which the luxuriant grounds of the park are seen, is one of the finest apartments in the kingdom. The ancient gallery of the mansion is preserved quite in its old state, is furnished with comfortable elegance, adorned with many fine works of art, and commands several very beautiful views of the grounds. The park is extensive, but rather flat, and is only varied by two small eminences, which, being judiciously planted, have a good effect from the house, opening up a fine view of the Malvern hills, which are sufficiently near to form fine features in the scenery. The noble proprietor of this splendid domain, John Reginald Pyndar, Earl Beauchamp, derives his descent from Richard, Lord Beauchamp, of Powyke, who married Eleanor, daughter of Sir Humphrey Stafford, and dying in 1496, his dignity ceased. He left three daughters, the second of whom, Anne, married Thomas Lygon, Esq., grandson of Thomas Lygon, who acquired the Madresfield estate through marriage with the heiress of Bracy, and had issue Sir Richard Lygon, Knt. of Madresfield, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of Mr. Justice Greville of the Court of Common Pleas. Their descendant, Margaret, married Reginald Pyndar, Esq., whose eldest son, Reginald, becoming heir to the Madresfield property, assumed the name of Lygon. The son of that gentleman, William Lygon, Esq., after having represented the county of Worcester in parliament for more than thirty years, was, in 1806, elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Beauchamp of Powyke, and was, in 1815, further advanced to the dignities of Viscount Elmley and Earl Beauchamp. His lordship died in 1823, when he was succeeded by his eldest son, William, who, dying without issue, was followed by his brother, the present earl, who has assumed the name and arms of Pyndar instead of Lygon.

MADRON, CORNWALL, a parish in the hun^d. of Penwith, union of Penzance: the parish includes the chapelry of Penzance: 314 miles from London (coach road 292), 2 from Penzance, 8 from St. Ives. —Gt. The Independents have a chapel here. The parochial charities produce about £12 a year. There was formerly an hospital here for leproous women, under the care of some secular brethren, who were to provide necessities, and manage their estates for them. It was founded by Manasser Bissett, about the close of the reign of Stephen, or the beginning of that of King Henry II., and was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. Hubert, Bishop of Salisbury, about 1190, substituted a prior and canons of the order of St. Austin, for the secular brethren. At the dissolution of the monasteries, the institution consisted of eight canons and — sisters, whose yearly revenues amounted to £197. 18s. 8d.; the site was granted, in the 29th year of Henry VIII., to Sir Edward Seymour, Viscount Beauchamp, a man of rare endowments, and of the highest private and public integrity.—The living (All Saints) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Sarum, not in charge: pres. net income, £121: patron, Christ Church, Oxford: pres. incumbent, Vernon Page, 1845: contains 4,410 acres: 113 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 700: ass^d. prop^r £5,014: poor rates in 1838, £1,189.—Fairs: May 6, Oct. 2, for cattle, horses, pigs, and cheese.—Maiden Bradley House is one of the seats of his Grace the Duke of Somerset, and constitutes the chief ornament of the village. It is a plain stone structure, consisting of a centre and two wings, which project from the body at right angles. In front of the house there is a small park, at the southern extremity of which there is a lofty chalk hill. His Grace, Edward Adolphus St. Maur, K.G., D.C.L., F.R.S., and F.S.A., Duke of Somerset, Baron Seymour, and a baronet, succeeded his father as eleventh duke in 1793. The family of his Grace derived its descent from an illustrious house in Normandy, and its name from St. Maur in that principality; and one of whom, Sir Richard St. Maur, becoming possessed of Woundow and Penhow, in Monmouthshire, fixed his residence at the latter. One of his descendants, in the words of Camden, "married one of the heiresses of the illustrious John Beauchamp," and from them, through an illustrious line of distinguished ancestry, was descended Sir John Seymour, whose daughter, Jane, became one of the wives of Henry VIII., by whom she was the mother of King Edward VI. Sir John died seven months after his daughter's elevation to the throne, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Edward, who was, in 1536, raised to the peerage by the title of Viscount Beauchamp, and further, in the following year, was elevated to the dignity of the earldom of Hertford. After filling several important situations in the state, his lordship was, in 1546-7, created Baron Seymour of Hache, and was, the next day, advanced to the dukedom of Somerset. In the same year he received a grant of the earl-marshalship of England for life, and was constituted governor and protector of the king and his realms. The fate of this nobleman was such as has too often attended the height of greatness. He was hurled, as is well known, from his lofty position, through the devices of one of his most confidential councillors, Dudley, Earl of Warwick and Duke of Northumberland, and was brought to the block in 1552. His Grace being attainted, his honours became forfeited; but his son, Edward Seymour, was created by Queen Elizabeth, in the first year of her reign, Baron Beauchamp and Earl of Hertford. The grandson of that nobleman, Sir William Seymour, was created Marquis of Hertford; but having attempted to marry Lady Arabella Stuart, first cousin of James I., without having gained that monarch's consent, he was obliged to fly the kingdom, but returning during the civil war, and taking an active part on the side of Charles I., he was restored to the barony of Hache, and the dukedom of Somerset, by a reversal of the attainder of his eminent ancestor the first duke. His Grace, the present peer, is the seventh in succession to the title from that nobleman, and a descendant of Sir Edward Seymour, son of the first Duke of Somerset.

MAIDENHEAD (OR MAIDENHETH), BERKS, a chapelry, borough, and market town, partly in the parish of Bray, and partly in that of Cookham, on the banks of the Thames: 22 miles from London (coach road 26), 13 from Reading. —Gt West. Rail. to Maidenhead station: from Derby, through London, &c., 154 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 12½ p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. and 9 p.m. —There was a handsome bridge erected here in 1772, over the Thames, at an expense of £20,000; it consists of seven semicircular arches constructed of stone, and of three smaller ones formed of brick. The Great Western Railway, which has a station at Maidenhead, is carried over the Thames by a bridge of two elliptical arches, each of 128 feet span, besides eight smaller land arches. The returns of the chapelry are included in the parishes of Bray and Cookham. Maidenhead is nearly comprised in one long street, which runs east and west, extending from the bridge to Folley Mill, and forming the line of separation between the two parishes just named—the houses on the south side belonging to Bray, and those on the north to Cookham. The town is well paved, and lighted with gas, the works for the production of the latter being situated on the south bank of the river. Of late years Maidenhead has undergone very considerable improvement, several new houses, and some of them of a superior order, having been built between it and North Town. The surrounding country is richly cultivated, and highly ornamented with woodlands, and the domains of the neighbouring nobility and gentry; the prospect from Folley Hill being very picturesque and beautiful. What was the origin of Maidenhead seems to be completely involved in obscurity. Its ancient name was South Allington, or Islington, to distinguish it from a manor called Allington, a mile north of the town; and thus it was called, says Lambard, til suche tyme as some popishe jugler wroughte leger de main there, under the name of a Virgine's head, by means whereof the people, flockinge thither, changed th' name. But it appears, by several ancient chronicles, to have been called "Maidenhith," or "Maydenhythe," partly from a great wharf of timber on the river at this point, previous to the erection of the old bridge in the 13th century. A chantry was originally established here by Margaret of France, second queen of Edward I.; and a guild was subsequently instituted, the object of which was, as stated in the charter of Henry VI., the finding of wax-lights, and other necessary divine articles, for the daily celebration of masses for ever, and for the maintenance and repair of the bridge across the Thames. This was an association of duties not at all uncommon in the ancient times, when spiritual improvement and corporeal necessities were more nearly conjoined than they are in the present day. To secure, however, a safe way across the river, which was of more importance then than even now, the corporation were granted a right to levy tolls on all merchandise going either over or under the bridge, together with a tree annually out of Windsor Forest. From its near neighbourhood to the metropolis, Maidenhead necessarily partook of all the troubles of the 17th century; and in 1688 the bridge was blockaded, to impede the advance of William, Prince of Orange, to London, and its defence was intrusted to a party of Irish soldiers, who, however, abandoned their posts and artillery, on hearing a Dutch march drummed by some of the townsmen. Until the formation of the Great Western Railway, Maidenhead was the first principal stage on the high road from London to the west of England. It is still provided with many excellent inns, and is the residence of an opulent and refined community. The chapel is an elegant and modern structure, built by subscription. The Independents, Society of Friends, and Huntingdonians, all have chapels here. One of the schools at Maidenhead was endowed by Lady Pocock with £2,000, and she also bequeathed, in 1816, £50 per annum for the Berks clerical fund, £50 to be distributed annually in small sums amongst the poor, and £10 each to ten single women servants, who should have lived seven years continuously with one family, within the town or its vicinity, besides weekly portions of bread to forty individuals, and annual donations, at Christmas, of coals, bread, and beef, to 100 poor persons. In 1660, an almshouse, for eight poor men and their wives, was founded by James Smith, Esq., whose original endowment of £40 a year has been increased by subsequent benefactions, the management of the charity being vested in the Salters' Company of London. The other charities amount to about £196 a year. From existing documents, it would seem that Maidenhead was first incorporated by Henry VI., who here established a religious fraternity, or guild. His charter was renewed by Queen Elizabeth in 1578, but three years afterwards she granted another, whereby the old chantry was dissolved, and Maidenhead was constituted a free town. After this, however, several other charters were granted, each of which bestowed peculiar privileges, granting, among others, the quarter sessions, the court of record, a court of the clerk of the market, and a court of pie powder, which last soon became obsolete.

Under the municipal act, Maidenhead is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors. The income of the borough amounts to about £1,750 a year. — The living (St. Mary), a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £9. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £172: patron, E. F. MAIDSTONE, KENT, a parish, borough, and market town, in the hun^d and union of Maidstone, lathe of Aylesford, in the centre of the county, of which it is the capital, on the river Medway: 46 miles from London (coach road 34), 8 from Rochester. — Sou. East. Rail. to Maidstone station: from Derby, through London, &c., 178 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 3½ p.m.: post closes 10½ a.m. and 9 p.m. — Maidstone is agreeably situated on the site of one of the hills which rise gently from the beautiful valley of the Medway, a position which is exceedingly favourable for keeping its streets both clean and healthy; it is also justly noted for the excellence of its water, and the dryness of its soil. The whole of its vicinity is rendered peculiarly beautiful, by the innumerable hop grounds and orchards by which it is surrounded. The town consists principally of four streets, which intersect each other at the market-cross, having, nevertheless, other smaller streets leading from them. The High Street, which is very spacious, leads downwards, in a westerly direction, to the river Medway, which it crosses by a bridge of seven arches, leading into the London road, where several elegant modern dwellings have, within these few years, been erected. The houses in Maidstone, itself, are mostly ancient, but of late years the whole place has been much improved. The church of All Saints is a large and handsome edifice, with an imposing interior. Trinity Church was built in 1819, at an expense of about £13,000; the living is in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury. St. Stephen's Church is in the hamlet of Tovil, and will accommodate about 600 persons. St. Peter's was formerly a chapel to an ancient hospital; it is a fine relic of ancient English architecture, and after having been disused for the period of 580 years, the Pilgrim's Chapel has again been made a place of public worship. It was reconsecrated by the Archbishop in August, 1839; its restoration and enlargement cost about £3,000; it will now hold about 600 persons. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, and Unitarians, all have places of worship here. An hospital, called the New Work, was built here about the year 1260, to the honour of St. Peter and St. Paul, by Boniface, then Archbishop of Canterbury; it was endowed with revenues amounting to £212. 5s. 3d. per annum. By an order in council, dated June 4th, 1841, there has been founded in the diocese of Canterbury the new archdeaconry of Maidstone, consisting of the rural deaneries of Sittingbourne, Charing, and Sutton. Maidstone is a place of high antiquity, and was anciently of great importance, being ranked by the Britons as the third of their cities, under the name of Megwad, or Medway, from the name of the river on which it stands. The place was afterwards called Medwasston, and afterwards Maddeston, as it was called in Domesday Book. It afterwards became part of the ancient possessions of the see of Canterbury, which it remained until the time of Archbishop Cranmer, by whom it was transferred to Henry VIII.; and it remained in the Crown until it was granted to Sir Thomas Wyatt of Allington Castle, in the time of Edward VI. On his rebellion and attainder it again fell to the Crown, and was ultimately transferred to the Romney family. During the civil war, Maidstone adhered to the royal side. The principal public edifices, besides those already noticed, are the county lunatic asylum, a large and important structure, and the infantry and cavalry barracks, forming a very extensive and symmetrical series of buildings, at the north end of the town, and on the Chatham and Rochester road, near the new county jail. There are also elegant assembly and concert rooms, a neat theatre, and a mechanics' institution. The county court is held in the county hall, a neat modern edifice; the county jail and house of correction stands in an elevated situation to the north of the town, and covers no less than fourteen acres of ground. It was built at the immense cost of £200,000, being a massive and substantial building, constructed of Kentish ragstone. Of late years Maidstone has been a prosperous and progressing town, some of the largest and most productive hop gardens in the country being situated in its immediate neighbourhood; within the parish alone, the number of acres under hop cultivation being between 400 and 500. In addition to this source of prosperity, there are several mills engaged in the manufacture of the finest quality of paper, which, together, employ more than 800 hands. And, besides, the general run of the country is in the highest state of cultivation, large quantities of fruit being sent from here to the London market, Maidstone being highly celebrated for its apples, cherries, and filberts, while it serves as an entrepot for goods to the agricultural districts for miles round, most of them coming by the Thames and Medway, which is here navigable for vessels of sixty tons burthen, and the traffic is known to have been for many years rapidly on the increase; vessels, in the aggregate, measuring 120,000 tons, having paid toll at the Hallington lock, about two miles below Maidstone. Maidstone has sent two members to parliament ever since the sixth year of Edward VI., the right of election, previous to the Reform Act, being vested in freemen, by inheritance, servitude, or purchase; it is now extended to the £10 householders. Maidstone was first incorporated in the third year of Edward VI., but various other charters were granted, up to the time of George II., who gave that which, until lately, was the governing rule of the town. Under the municipal act, the borough is divided into three wards, and the government is vested in six aldermen and eighteen councillors, under the usual corporate style. The free grammar-school is endowed with £50 per annum. The almshouses at Maidstone are numerous. Six of them were founded and endowed in 1687 with £60 per annum, for six poor widows. Six other almshouses were endowed in 1736, by Mr. Edward Hunter, for three poor men and three poor women, each of whom have stipends of £20 a year. Besides these there are several others. Fisher's charity yields £162 per annum, which is distributed in pensions to poor widows, and in paying apprentice fees of £15 each, for boys put by the parish to a trade. Gunneraley's charity, which yields £38 a year, is distributed in bread to the poor. The other charities produce about £138 a year, of which about one-half is used in purchasing bread for the indigent of the county. The Maidstone poor-law union comprises fifteen parishes, with a population of about 29,000 persons, spread over an area of fifty-one square miles. —The living (All Saints) is a perpetual curacy, in the diocese of Canterbury: pres. net income, £720: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, W. The Wesleyans have a place of worship here. On the heights, above the village, there is a strong battery for the defence of Plymouth Sound, which bounds the parish on the south-east.---The living (St. Macra), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £23. 11s. ½d.: pres. net income, £223: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, John Rogers, 1831: contains 2,260 acres: 506 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,725: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,134: ass^d. prop^r. £3,465: poor rates in 1838, £801.---Fairs: May 1, Sept. 29, for cattle.---Mount-Edgcombe, the delightful seat of the Earl of Mount-Edgcombe, is in this parish. Though not large, the mansion is so beautifully placed, and is surrounded by such extensive and noble grounds, that it is justly considered one of the finest seats in the kingdom. Stretching along the foot of the lofty cliffs by which the grounds are on that side bounded, lies the ever-active waters of Plymouth Sound. Laid out like a panorama in front, are the towns of Stonehouse, Devonport, and Plymouth with the lofty and varied grounds by which they are backed; and to the left are the woody lands bordering the estuary of Millbrook, and all the silent armaments of the ships in ordinary in Hamoaze, framed in by the romantic scenery mirrored in St. Germain's river. The family of the noble Earl who is the proprietor of this splendid domain, is of very great antiquity in the county of Devon. The first of whom we have any specific notice was William de Edgecombe, who settled at Cothele, in this neighbourhood. From him was descended Sir Richard Edgecombe, Knt., a person of great eminence in the times of Edward IV., Richard III., and Henry VII. Through several generations, the various members of the family filled high offices of trust and distinction; and one of them, Richard Edgecombe, Esq. of Mount-Edgcombe, one of the lords of the Treasury in the reign of George I., was elevated to the peerage, after a long career in the House of Commons, as Baron Edgecombe; and his grandson, George, was, in 1781, created Viscount Mount-Edgcombe and Valtort, and was, in 1789, raised to the dignity of Earl of Mount-Edgcombe. Of that nobleman, the present right honourable representative of the family is the grandson.

Trevelyan, 1834: contains 1,260 acres: 41 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 232: ass^d. prop^r. £1,487: poor rates in 1838, £86. 18s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

MALDON, Essex, a borough, port, and market town, in the hun^d of Dengie, union of Maldon, on the river Chelmer, near its efflux into the estuary called the Blackwater River: 44 miles from London (coach road 37), 9 from Chelmsford.---East. Co^a. Rail. through Witham to Maldon station: from Derby, through London, &c., 176 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m.---Maldon is a place of great antiquity, and has been frequently assigned as the Cumudunum of the Romans, but on very insufficient evidence, as neither its local position, nor any ancient remnants found in or near the site, have justified such a belief. On the western site of the town there are some remains of a camp, which was occupied successively by the Romans, the Saxons, and the Danes; it occupies about 24 acres of ground. Three sides of this fortification are still visible, but the other has been built upon and defaced. The earliest notice we have of Maldon, of any creditable authenticity, is in the year 913, when Edward the Elder encamped here to impede the progress of the Danes, while a fortification was being constructed at Whitham. Maldon is picturesquely situated on the ridge of a hill, commanding an extensive prospect over the marshes to the sea-coast; consisting principally of one long street, which runs parallel to the river, the eastern end forming the portion of the place called the Hythe. The church of All Saints is an ancient and spacious edifice, surmounted by a triangular tower, and a hexangular spire of singular appearance. St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy, not in charge: gross income, £184: patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church of All Saints is said to have been founded in 1056, by a Saxon nobleman, whose name was Ingelric; it is situated in the lower part of the town, near the Chamiel, and anciently served as a sea-mark. The tower having become ruinous, fell down and partly destroyed the body of the church, which was repaired under the authority of a brief granted by Charles I. The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. A free grammar-school, founded in 1608, was endowed by Mr. Ralph Breder with £300, a benefaction to which other donations were subsequently added; its present income is about £50 a year. The other charities are numerous, producing as much as £150 a year. Maldon claims to be a borough by prescription, but the earliest charter was granted by Henry II., who gave to the burgesses all the lands and possessions which they then held of the Crown, together with their ancient bounds, to hold by the tenure of free burgage. The petty sessions for the hundred of Dengie are held here. The town-hall is an ancient brick edifice, erected in the reign of Henry VI. Under the municipal act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors, under the usual corporate style, its income amounting to about £1,600 a year. A commission of the peace, and a court of quarter sessions, has been appointed for the county. Maldon has returned two members to parliament ever since the second year of Edward III.; the parliamentary boundaries comprising the old borough and the parish of Heybridge, the mayor is the returning officer. There is a very extensive fishery on the coast, which belongs to the corporation. The Maldon poor-law union comprises 32 parishes, with a population of about 19,000 persons, spread over an area of 127 square miles. Dr. Plume, archdeacon of Rochester, who founded the Plumean professorship of astronomy and experimental philosophy at Cambridge, was a native of this place. The noble family of Capel, Earls of Essex, derive the secondary title of viscount from Maldon.

—The living (All Saints), a vicarage, with that of St. Peter (which has no church), in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £319: patron, A. R. MALHAM, WEST RIDING, YORK, a township in the parish of Kirkby, in Malham Dale—(which see for access, &c.): 236 miles from London, 6 from Settle, 10 from Skipton.—Money orders issued at Settle: London letters deliv^d. 12½ p.m.: post closes 1 p.m.—The verdant dale in which this township is situated terminates in an immense crag of limestone rock, almost 300 feet in height, called Malham Cove. At a short distance from its termination, the river Aire has its source in a circular lake, about a mile in circumference, called Malham Water, the waters of which find a subterraneous passage, whence they emerge at the bottom of this great rock. In the time of a flood, however, this opening is not sufficiently large to allow for the issue of all the waters, and they then pour over the top of the rock in a cascade of almost inconceivable grandeur. Eastward of this cove, the ridge of the cliff is rent into a wild chasm, called Gordale Scaur. A peculiar kind of the valuable mineral called calamine is obtained here.—Contains 3,870 acres: 50 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 233: ass^d prop^r £3,022: poor rates in 1838, £168. 16s.

MALHAM-MOOR, WEST RIDING, YORK, a township in the same parish, and bordering with the preceding: 230 miles from London, 7 from Kettlewell, 14 from Skipton.—(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)—Contains 3,880 acres: 17 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 102: ass^d prop^r £3,253: poor rates in 1837, £150. 19s.

MALLERSTANG, WESTMORELAND, a chapelry

in the parish of Kirkby-Stephen—(which see for access, &c.): 261 miles from London, 5 from Kirkby-Stephen, 5 from Hawes.—Money orders issued at Brough: London letters deliv^d. 5½ p.m.: post closes 9 p.m.—The chapel having become ruinous in 1663, was repaired by the celebrated Countess of Pembroke, who endowed it with lands near Sedberg, in Yorkshire, which produced about £11 a year, but which now are worth upwards of £20 a year, on condition that the curate should teach the children of the Dale to read and write in the chapel; in compliance with which condition, thirty-five children are now taught. On the eastern bank of the Eden, which has its source here, stand the remains of the ancient castle of Pendragon. Tradition assigns its foundation to Uter Pendragon, a celebrated hero, and the fabled builder of Stonehenge. By the aid of his friend Merlin, he assumed the shape of King Gorlois, passed, by means of that deception, through his guards, and filled his place on the marital couch. But, on his return, his magic arts failed him; he was unable to divert the waters of the Eden from their course, and flow round the walls of the castle, a circumstance which gave rise to the old distich—

"Let Uter Pendragon do what he can, Eden will run where Eden ran."

It still preserves its old course, and a deep fosse, on the most defenceless side, now supplies its place. A well near the castle brings up another part of the history of this famous chieftain, for it is said that the Saxons, being unable to vanquish him in open fight, threw poison into this, his favourite spring, and he, and a hundred of his favourite courtiers, drinking of it, all died. The castle was first destroyed by the Scots, in a raid, in 1341, but it was afterwards, as late as 1661, entirely repaired, and made habitable by Anne, Countess of Pembroke, who some time resided here; but was again destroyed in 1685, by Thomas, Earl of Thanet. On the opposite side of the river there is a small camp, defended by a fosse, and a vallum of turf. Lord Ribblesdale has an elegant seat here, and another residence at Gisburne Park. His lordship is the representative of a family of great antiquity in Yorkshire, and which has been seated for more than five centuries at Gisburne, which came to the Listers by marriage. The first upon record is John Lister, son of Thomas Lister, who married Isabel, daughter and heir of John de Bolton, bow-bearer of Bowland, from which union, the fifteenth in direct descent, Thomas Lister, Esq. of Gisburne Park, was a member of parliament from the year 1710, till his death in 1745, and one of whose great-grandsons was Thomas Henry Lister, Esq., author of the celebrated novel entitled "Granby." Mr. Lister's grandson, through his heir, also named Thomas, was, in 1797, raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Ribblesdale, of Gisburne Park, in Yorkshire. Of that nobleman, the present noble lord, who succeeded to the title and estates when he was only four years of age, is the grandson.—The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archd^y and diocese of Carlisle: pres. net income, £64: patron, Earl of Thanet: pres. incumbent, R. Robinson, 1844: contains 58 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 223: ass^d. prop^r. £1,453: poor rates in 1838, £111. 7s.

Tithes commuted in 1805. —Fairs: July 15, and Aug. 6. —Ditton Place is the seat of John Golding, Esq.; Bradbourne Park, of Captain Twisden; and Clare House, of Alfred Wigan, Esq.

MALLING (WEST), KENT, a parish and market town in the hun^d. of Larkfield, lathe of Aylesford, union of Malling: 29 miles from London, 12 from Gravesend. —(For access, see above.) —Money orders issued at Maidstone: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. —The church is ancient, and has many portions in the Norman style. There was formerly a Benedictine monastery here, founded by Gundulph, Bishop of Rochester, in 1090, the revenues of which, at the dissolution, amounted to £245. 10s. 2d. The west front of the abbey is still standing, and forms a very interesting and picturesque feature in the landscape. The town, which is situated on a small rivulet that falls into the Medway, consists of respectable houses, built of a peculiarly red brick, and forming one spacious street nearly half a mile in length. A workhouse has been built here, which is capable of accommodating 320 persons. The Malling poor-law union comprises twenty-two parishes, with a population of about 16,500 persons, spread over an area of sixty-five square miles. —The living (the Virgin Mary), a vicarage in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £269: patron, T. A. Douce, Esq.: pres. incumbent, J. H. Timins: contains 1,320 acres: 267 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 1,784: probable popⁿ. in 1849, 2,052: ass^d. prop^r. £3,433: poor rates in 1838, £452. 11s. —Market day, Saturday. Fairs: Aug. 1, Oct. 2, and Nov. 17, cattle. —Leybourne Grange, close by, is the elegant residence of Sir John Hawley, Bart. —(See LEYBOURNE.) —Addington Place is the seat of the Hon. John Wingfield Stratford.

MALLING (SOUTH), SUSSEX, a parish in the hun^d. of Ringmer, rape of Pevensey, union of Lewes, adjoining to the town of Lewes, on the river Ouse: 51 miles from London (coach road 50), 1 from Lewes, 9 from Brighton. —Brighton and Sou. Coast Rail. to Lewes, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through London, &c., 183 miles. —Money orders issued at Lewes: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. —According to Tanner, there was anciently here a collegiate establishment, consisting of a dean, chancellor, and their several officers. Its revenues, at the dissolution, were estimated at £45. 12s. 5d.: they were granted, in the thirty-seventh year of Henry VIII., to Sir Thomas Palmer. Few traces of the old building now remain. The mansion called the Deanery occupies the site of the college. —The living (St. Michael) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Chichester: pres. net income, £117: patron, Mrs. Courthope: pres. incumbent, F. C. Chalmers, 1849: contains 2,680 acres: 119 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 646: ass^d. prop^r. £5,018: poor rates in 1837, £443.

MALLWYD, MERIONETH, a parish in the union of Dolgelly, hun^d. of Tal-y-bont and Mowddwy, a portion of it also extends into the hun^d. of Mathrafel, county of Montgomery: the parish includes the township of Caer: 200 miles from London, 9 from Dolgelly, 4 from Dinas-Mowddwy. —Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton and Oswestry to Welshpool, thence 25 miles: from Derby, through Stafford, Shrewsbury, &c., 165 miles. —Money orders issued at Corwen: London letters deliv^d. 4 p.m.: post closes 8 p.m. —The parochial charities produce about £12 a year. The Calvinistic Methodists have a chapel here. In the churchyard there are several yew-trees of immense size and extraordinary girth, but one of them surpasses in size and beauty the celebrated yew of Aldworth, in Berkshire; it is, in fact, a sort of grove of trees issuing from a single trunk, forming a very extensive shade, and bearing a most magnificent appearance. The scenery on every side around this village is truly delightful; the mountains around closing into a grand amphitheatre, and having the shelving sides and peaks beautifully adorned with hanging woods. —The living is a rectory in the diocese of St. Asaph: pres. net income, £255: patron, Bishop of St. Asaph: pres. incumbent, W. Pugh, 1827: contains 247 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 1,177: probable popⁿ. in 1849, 1,353: ass^d. prop^r. £3,816: poor rates in 1837, £544. 8s.

MALMESBURY, WILTS, a borough and market town in the hun^d. and union of Malmesbury: Malmesbury comprehends the tithings of Burton-Hill, Cole and West-Park, Corston, Milbourne, and Redborne: 89 miles from London (coach road 94), 9 from Chippenham. —Gt. West. Rail. through Swindon to Minety, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Stonehouse to Minety, &c., 125 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 6½ a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 6½ a.m. and 6½ p.m. —Malmesbury is situated on a fine eminence, peninsulated by the river Avon; two streams, over which there are bridges of six arches, here uniting to form the lower Avon at the south-eastern extremity of the town. It was formerly walled, possessed a castle, and was considered to be almost impregnable from the strength of its fortifications. On the east side of the town there are still considerable remains of the ancient wall, and the northern gate stood until it was taken down in 1778. Malmesbury consists principally of three streets—two of them called High Street and Silver Street, running parallel to each other, and the third, called Oxford Street, crossing both at their northern extremities. The market cross, which stands near the centre of the town, is a beautiful stone edifice with flying buttresses, and has a richly ornamented turret, built in the reign of Henry VII. But the most interesting relics in this place are those of its ecclesiastical institutions. According to Tannar, there was a British nunnery here, in a very flourishing condition, as early as the year 603, but it was afterwards suppressed by St. Austin, under the pretence that the ladies suffered themselves to be seduced by the soldiers of the garrison. It stood without the town, near the south bridge, on the road to Chippenham, and at an after period was converted into an hospital for lepers. Maidulph, a Scottish monk, began a monastery in the seventh century, of which his celebrated scholar, Aldhelm, was the first abbot. The monks were of the Benedictine order, and by the liberality of the several kings of England, the abbey rose to be the most affluent ecclesiastical establishment in the West of England, Glastonbury only excepted. At the general dissolution, the abbey possessed a revenue of £813. 17s. 7d. Not more than a sixth of this once noble edifice has been left, but what remains is amply sufficient to show its former extent and grandeur. The father of the celebrated Thomas Hobbes, sometimes called the Philosopher of Malmesbury, was for some time vicar of Westport, with this place, which was his native town. He was born in 1588, was educated at Magdalene Hall, Oxford, and, in 1606, became tutor to a son of the Earl of Devonshire. On the death of his pupil and patron, he became travelling tutor to a young gentleman; but the Countess of Devonshire recalled him to her family, to take upon him the education of the young earl, whom, in 1628, he attended into Italy, and at Pisa became acquainted with the great astronomer, Galileo. In 1642, he printed his book called "De Cive," which, from its dangerous principles, made him many enemies. Soon after this he was appointed mathematical tutor to the Prince of Wales. He subsequently published several other works, all bad in their tendency, both religious and political, and he has justly been branded as one of the most refined deists that ever existed. The latter part of his life was spent at Chatsworth, the seat of the Duke of Devonshire, in Derbyshire, where he died in 1679. Malmesbury was early distinguished for its commercial importance, a guild of merchants being established here as early as soon after the Norman Conquest; the manufacture of woollen cloth was the staple trade of the town: Tanning and other manufactures have also been carried on here to some extent. Two of the schools here are endowed, one with £50, and the other with £40 a year. There are two small hospitals, that of St. John having an endowment of £20 a year; Jenner's almshouses, which consist of four tenements, rent-free, for the poor. Beside these, there are several minor charities, which, in the aggregate, produce about £70 a year. Malmesbury was chartered in the reign of William III., but its corporation had long ceased, before the passing of the general municipal act, to be anything more than an inert body, and the place was consequently left out of the schedule of the bill. Two representatives had been regularly returned to parliament, from the twenty-third year of Edward I. till the passing of the Reform Act, when the borough was limited, and the parliamentary boundaries were enlarged, so as to include the out-parishes of St. Paul and St. Mary, and the several parishes of Brockenborough, Charlton, Garsdon, Lee, Great Somerford, Little Somerford, Foxley, and Bremhillham. The Malmesbury poor-law union comprises twenty-five parishes, with a population of about 13,280 persons, spread over an area of ninety-three square miles.---The living (the Virgin Mary) is a vicarage, with the curacies of Redborne and Corston: pres. net income, £265: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, Charles Pitt, 1829: contains 5,990 acres: 454 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,367: probable popⁿ in 1849, 2,722: ass^d. prop^r. £10,851: poor rates in 1838, £790. 3s.---Market day, Saturday.---Fairs: March 28, April 28, June 6.---Bankers: North Wilts Banking Co.—draw on Drewett and Fowley; Branch of Wilts and Dorset Banking Co.—draw on London and Westminster Bank.---White Lion Inn.

There was formerly a cell here to the priory of Montacute, in Somersetshire, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, amounted to £15. 6s. 8d. per annum.---The living (St. Mary), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y. and diocese of Llandaff, is valued at £5: pres. net income, £60: patron, Sir. C. Morgan, Bart.: pres. incumbent, W. D. Isaac, 1846: contains 720 acres: 39 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 270: ass^d. prop^r. £948: poor rates in 1838, £115. 2s. Tithes commuted in 1839.---Malpas Court is the seat of Thomas Prothero, Esq., who was high sheriff of Monmouthshire in 1846, and is now a magistrate of the county.

MALPAS, CHESTER, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Broxton, union of Wrexham: the parish includes the townships of Agden, Bickerton, Bickley, Bradley, Broxton, Bulkeley (or Buckley), Chidlow, Cholm^dadeley, Charlton, Cuddington, Duckington, Edge, Egerton, Hampton, Larkton, Maccfen, Malpas, Newton-juxta-Malpas, Oldcastle, Overton, Stockton, Lushingham with Grindley, Wickhaugh, and Wigland: 173 miles from London (coach road 168), 15 from Chester.---Nor. West. Rail. to Crewe, thence 15 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 73 miles.---Money orders issued at Chester: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m.---Malpas is pleasantly situated on an eminence, the upper portions of which command beautiful views of the surrounding country. It chiefly consists of four main streets, which diverge from a common centre, and the houses of which, though of comfortable, are of very unpretentious appearance. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in agricultural pursuits. This extensive parish formed one of the ancient baronies of one of the counties palatine, the barons of which held powers of capital jurisdiction within their de-mesne; and the castle, which formerly embellished the town, but of which very few traces now remain, is supposed to have been erected by one of the earlier barons. The church is built in the decorated style of English architecture, which prevailed during the reign of Henry VII., and contains many elaborate and elegant family monuments. St. Chad's, the attendant chapelry, has a gross income of £144 per annum, and is in the gift of the rectors of Malpas. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists, all have places of worship here. The grammar-school was founded by subscription, about the latter end of the seventeenth century. Towards its endowment, Hugh, Lord Chancellor Cholmondeley, contributed £200, on condition that he and his heirs should nominate the master; and in lieu of the money then raised, amounting to about £530, he charged an estate in Malpas, then called the Old Hall, with a yearly payment of £25 a year for a salary to the schoolmaster, for whose use he also gave a house and a schoolroom. About fifty years ago, the old schoolhouse was taken down, and rebuilt at the expense of Mr. Vaughan, and about ten scholars now receive their education gratuitously. The other charities are numerous, and some of them, especially Dr. Townson's and Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor's, are richly endowed. The other benefactions produce about £100 a year. The money left for the purchase of lands for the benefit of the township is divided according to what is called "the Mize," which means, that the proportion of the benefactions is to be divided among the several townships according to their assessment to the church rates. Popⁿ in 1841, 5,726: probable popⁿ in 1849, 6,585: poor rates in 1838, £1,981. 13s. Market day, Wednesday. Fairs: April 5, July 26, and December 8, for cattle.

MALPAS, CHESTER, a township in the above parish. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) Contains 2,110 acres: 213 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,155: ass^d prop^y £3,480.

MALSWICK, GLOUCESTER, a tithing in the parish of Newent—(which see for access, &c.): 114 miles from London, 9 from Gloucester, 1 from Newent. Money orders issued at Gloucester: London letters deliv^d 9½ a.m.: post closes 7¼ p.m. Contains 40 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 248. (Other returns with the parish.)

MALTBY, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a township in the parish of Stainton—(which see for access, &c.): 239 miles from London, 3 from Yarm, 6 from Stokesley. Money orders issued at Yarm: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m. Contains 1,180 acres: 42 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 171: ass^d prop^y £1,393: poor rates in 1838, £71. 8s.

MALTBY, WEST RIDING, YORK, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Rotherham, at the source of the Ryton: the parish includes the townships of Hooton-Levet and Maltby: 179 miles from London (coach road 159), 9 from Bawtry, 7 from Rotherham. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Derby to Rotherham, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Chesterfield, &c., 47 miles. Money orders issued at Bawtry: London letters deliv^d 10½ a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m. One of the schools here is endowed with £15 per annum: the other charities produce about £10 per annum. The living (St. Bartholomew), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of York, is valued at £4. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £120: patron, Earl of Scarborough: pres. incumbent, George Rolleston, 1816: contains 4,280 acres: 165 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 839: poor rates in 1838, £359. 2s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

MALTBY-LE-MARSH, LINCOLN, a parish in the Wold division of the hun^d of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth: 135 miles from London (coach road 142), 4 from Alford, 10 from Louth. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough and Boston to Alford, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Nottingham and Boston to Alford, &c., 96 miles. Money orders issued at Alford: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. One of the schools here has an endowment of £50 a year. The living (All Saints), a disch^d rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £11. 17s. 8d.: pres. net income, £256: patron, Rev. George Allott: pres. incumbent, John Allott, 1836: contains 1,160 acres: 51 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 229: ass^d prop^y £1,468: poor rates in 1838, £106. 11s.

MALTON (NEW), NORTH RIDING, YORK, a borough and market town in the wapentake of Ryedale, union of Malton, on the river Derwent: the borough comprises the parishes of St. Leonard and St. Michael, and is co-extensive with them: 241 miles from London (coach road 217), 18 from York. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and York, to Malton station: from Derby, through York, &c., 109 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. This town is of great antiquity, and evidently, from the number of coins and other relics which have been discovered on its site, constituted an important Roman station, a supposition borne out by the fact, that on the opposite side of the river the remains of extensive intrenchments for its defence are still visible. During the reign of Stephen it was laid in ashes by the army under Archbishop Thurston, when he laid siege to it for the purpose of dislodging the Scots; and when it was rebuilt, it was called "New Malton." Malton is pleasantly situated on an eminence overlooking the river Derwent, and the agreeable vale through which it flows, and which form the boundary between the east and north ridings. It is extensive for the number of its inhabitants, clean, and well-built, several very excellent houses having been erected of late years within its precincts. The market-place is very large, being divided into two parts by the town-hall and St. Michael's church. Most of the trade of the district, of which this is the centre, consists in coals, corn, bacon, butter, and other domestic necessities, large quantities of which are transferred from hence to Hull, Leeds, and other commercial and manufacturing depots, by means of the Derwent and its tributaries, the river having been made navigable from Malton to its embouchure in the Ouse, in the reign of Queen Anne. The borough is not included in any of the schedules of the late municipal act; its government is vested in a bailiff and his subordinate officers, who are chosen at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. The general quarter sessions for the north riding are held here. New Malton, in conjunction with the parishes of St. Leonard, St. Michael, Old Malton, and Norton, sends two members to parliament; the bailiff being the returning officer. It is also one of the polling-places for the county. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. One of the schools here has a small endowment; the other charities are of trifling amount. The Malton poor-law union comprises 68 parishes, with a population of about 21,000 persons, spread over an area of 167 square miles.---The living (St. Leonard and St. Michael) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Cleveland, and diocese of York: pres. net income, £198: patron, Earl Fitzwilliam: pres. incumbent, William Carter, 1843: contains 110 acres: 763 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,021: probable popⁿ in 1849, 4,624: ass^d prop^y £10,646: poor rates in 1838, £1,506. 6s.---Market day, Saturday. Fairs: Monday to Saturday before Palm-Sunday; Saturday before Whitsuntide; Saturday before July 15; Oct. 11 and 12; Saturday before Martinmas-day.---Bankers: Branch of City of York and County Banking Company—draw on Barnett, Hoares, & Co.; Branch of York Union Bank—draw on Glyn, Halifax, & Co.; Bower & Co.—draw on Curries & Co.---Inns: Bay Horse, New Glove, Talbot, White Horse.

MALTON (OLD), NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish in the wapentake of Ryedale, union of Malton, on the western bank of the Derwent: 218 miles from London, 1 from New Malton, 7 from Pickering.---(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)---This is supposed to be the place where the mother church of the two neighbouring chapelries of St. Michael and St. Leonard stood; and a presumption has been readily entertained, that a connection subsisted between New and Old Malton, far greater than that which mere vicinage would naturally create—a supposition fortified by the fact, that the inhabitants of the former place have always been allowed rights of common over the waste grounds belonging to the latter; and in the enclosure act of 36th George III. a clause was expressly inserted, securing to the owners of messuages in New Malton a hundred acres, as a recompense for the rights of common which they had lost. A priory for Gilbertine canons was founded here in honour of the Blessed Virgin in 1150, by Eustace Fitz-John, the revenues of which, at the general dissolution of the monasteries, were estimated at £257. 7s. per annum.---Contains 4,020 acres: 233 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,296: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,491: ass^d prop^y £9,767: poor rates in 1837, £368. 6s.

MALVERN (GREAT), WORCESTER, a parish and village in the lower division of the hund^d of Pershore, union of Upton-on-Severn: the parish includes the chapelries of Newland: 127 miles from London (coach road 108), 7 from Upton-on-Severn, 9 from Worcester.---Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Worcester, &c., 80 miles.---Money orders issued at Upton-on-Severn: London letters deliv^d 9½ a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m.---

The village of Malvern is delightfully situated on the eastern declivity of one of the Malvern hills, and is much resorted to on account of its medicinal springs, the beauty of its situation, and the purity and salubrity of its climate. Every accommodation has, therefore, been provided for the health, comfort, and recreation of its visitors: hot and cold baths have been prepared, hotels have been erected and richly furnished, gardens have been planted, and romantic walks have been formed in every direction. Formerly there was an hermitage here, which was endowed by Edward the Confessor, which was, by Wolphston, bishop of Worcester and Aldwin, the principal, converted into a Benedictine priory. An able correspondent of that clever periodical, the Athenæum, in speaking of this institution, very correctly says: "The priory of Great Malvern was, during the middle ages, one of the most flourishing conventual establishments in the western counties. Chartered by the Conqueror, endowed by Beaulerc, celebrated by Malmesbury, who, in his work, 'De Monasteriis,' earnestly recommended it to the notice and support of his contemporaries,—the asylum of more than one illustrious scholar, who, in those unsettled days, sought in the calm repose of the cloister, leisure and opportunities for study which could nowhere else be found, the priory of Great Malvern has an additional claim on our attention, because it was here that the author of that curious and powerful work, the 'Visions of Piers Plowman,' dwelt, and from whence, not improbably, he set forth on that fine spring morning, when he wandered at the foot of the Malvern hills, until he sunk into that tranced slumber, which he fables to have been the origin of his Vision." Very few remains of this once splendid structure now exist, the refectory, now used as a barn, and the gate-house being all that are left. The church of Malvern is one of the very finest parochial Gothic edifices in the kingdom, and has indeed been designated as "another Westminster Abbey." The nave is Norman, but the choir, tower, and ornaments of the church, are in the most decorated pointed style, and rich in the extreme, from the elaboration of their workmanship, the square embattled tower rising to the height of 124 feet from the centre of the transept. Henry VII., his queen, Elizabeth of York, and their two sons, Arthur and Henry, often resided here, and took great delight in Malvern; and the church was almost entirely rebuilt, and greatly embellished, under the direction of Sir Reginald Bray, the architect of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and a great favourite of the king's; but it is generally believed that that portion which is in the Anglo-Norman style, is coeval with the original fabric. Several portions of the old stained glass which were formerly scattered about the building, totally lost as to their effect, have within these few years been collected by Dr. Card, who had them placed in the three southern windows of the chancel, into which a rich stream of light now pours, giving to that part of the church a truly magnificent appearance. The parochial charities produce about £19 a year.---The living, a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Worcester, is valued at £8. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £350: patron, E. T. Foley, Esq.: pres. incumbent, John Wright, 1844: contains 5,020 acres: 397 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,911: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,348: ass^d prop^r £7,358: poor rates in 1838, £566. 10s.

MALVERN (LITTLE), WORCESTER, a parish in the lower division of the hun^d of Oswaldslow, union of Upton-on-Severn: 116 miles from London, 5 from Upton-on-Severn, 13 from Bromyard. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) There was formerly a priory of Benedictine monks here, a cell to the abbey of Worcester, which was founded in 1171, by two brothers, Joceline and Edrid, each of whom successively became priors of the establishment; its revenues at the general dissolution amounted to £102 per annum. The ruins of the church, and a small portion of building adjoining, are all that remain of the ancient fabric. The living (St. Giles) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Worcester: pres. net income, £43: patron, Earl Somers: pres. incumbent, Thomas Taylor, 1845: contains 550 acres: 16 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 103: ass^d prop^r £582: poor rates in 1838, £25.

MAMBLE, WORCESTER, a parish in the lower division of the hun^d of Dodingtree, union of Clebury-Mortimer: 133 miles from London (coach road 136), 7 from Bewdley, 8 from Tenbury. Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 15 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Worcester, &c., 86 miles. Money orders issued at Bewdley: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. An entire Roman brick-kiln, a tessellated pavement, great portions of an aqueduct, and various other Roman remains, have been discovered in the parish. Coals are found abundantly here, and hops are cultivated to some extent in the parish. The living (St. John), a disch^d vicarage, with the curacy of Bayton, in the archd^y of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £9. 4s. 7d.: pres. net income, £328: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, David Davies, 1845: contains 2,130 acres: 66 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 377: ass^d prop^r £2,903: poor rates in 1838, £146. 8s.

Money orders issued at Chudleigh: London letters deliv^d 9½ a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. The parochial charities produce about £3 a year. On Mamhead Point there is an obelisk of Portland stone, erected by Thomas Balle, Esq., who lately occupied Mamhead House, and in whose grounds there is a rare collection of exotic plants. At Mamhead also is the residence of Sir Thomas William Newman, Bart., whose family has been established in Devonshire for several centuries; for as early as the reigns of Henry VI. and Henry VII., the house of Newman appears upon the records of the town; and over the remains of John Newman of Dartmouth, who was buried at St. Peter's in 1640, the arms are sculptured, which are now borne by the family. The present representative of the family, Sir Robert, who was high sheriff of the county in 1827, and had for some years been the member of parliament for Exeter, was in 1836 created a baronet. The living (St. Thomas), a disch^d rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £10. 17s. 6d.: pres. net income, £200: patron, Sir R. Newman, Bart.: pres. incumbent, H. H. Courtenay, 1845: contains 1,220 acres: 52 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 246: ass^d prop^r £1,621: poor rates in 1838, £133. 9s.

Shortly after this date, in the years 80, 81, and 82, a regular town was planned, and inhabited by a mixed population of Celtic and Romish origin. For four centuries the Romans appear to have retained possession of this position, during which they made it the centre of their military operations for the surrounding country. When they were obliged, by the necessity of circumscribing the empire, to retire from this Ultima Thule of their notions of civilization, the aborigines again assumed, no doubt much against their will, undisputed sovereignty, but very shortly afterwards, and without much difficulty, yielded it to the Saxons. About the year 920, the town was fortified by Edward the Elder, king of the Mercians, and about that time, or, at the latest, in 931, it was styled a Saxon city, while Salford was described as a Saxon manor and royal demesne, its name being conferred on the hundred. In 1230, Ralph de Blundeville, Earl of Chester, granted, in his feudal right as a "sief retinée" of the sovereign, a charter to the place, making Salford a free and corporate borough. In 1294, Thomas de Gresley, the sixth baron, took a survey of his manor of Manchester, and, in 1301, granted a liberal charter to his townsmen. Lord William West, the eleventh baron, having differed with the citizens on some points of domestic polity, in 1579, sold the manor in that year to John Lacye, a clothworker of London, for the sum of £3,000—a singular foundation for the metropolis of textile fabrics. In 1596, Lacye sold the domain to Sir Nicholas Mosley of Hough-End Hall, clearing £500 by the bargain, and it has ever since remained in the family of that gentleman's descendants. Great attempts have been made within the present century, by the corporation of Manchester, to repurchase the manor; but although they offered the large sum of £70,000 for it, their endeavours have failed, as the proprietors put £20,000 more upon its price. During the civil war, Manchester was first enlisted by Sir Cecil Trafford on the part of the king, but Charles having remained deaf to the petitions of the inhabitants for peace, they declared for the parliament, and induced the county militia to garri-son the town. In 1642, it was consequently besieged, and was fiercely attacked by the royalists, under the Earl of Derby, who was, however, obliged to retire on the close of the fifth day, in consequence of a relief by the Parliamentarians, under Sir Thomas Fairfax, who stationed himself here early in the following year. In 1654, Manchester sent a member to parliament by order of Cromwell, and a second member was added the next year; but the town lost its franchise at the restoration of Charles II., and did not recover it until after the passing of the general Reform Act, when it was once more worthily made a member of the representative body of the country. In 1745, the Scottish rebels, under the command of the young Pretender, entered the town, where they were joined by 300 men; they quitted, after little more than a week had elapsed, but again re-entered it on their retreat, when they levied a contribution of £5,000 upon the inhabitants. From that time the mere play of party has been of secondary importance in this great commercial entrepot, and the history of the town is to be met with only in an account of the rise of its gigantic manufacturing business—with one exception, perhaps, viz., when it was constituted a city, by the erection of the see of Manchester in 1847, when Dr. Prince, previously head-master of King Edward's collegiate school at Birmingham, was made its first bishop, principally, it is understood, at the instance of his Royal Highness Prince Albert. As stated above, Manchester may truly be said to be the metropolis of the manufactures of the textile fabrics in England, and though it is adorned by many noble and splendid buildings, yet its most prevailing features are long lines of huge buildings, frequently extending to hundreds of feet in length, and rising to almost numberless stories in height, filled with extensive and complicated machinery, and animated by the presence of countless beings, whose busy hands and busier heads are continually occupied in forwarding the strange and magic process, by which the luxuries of the peeress of a bygone century have become the daily necessities of the household maid of our own times. There seems to have been something, even from the very first, in the situation of Manchester, which gave it the opportunity of becoming a first-rate place of business; for even long before the thought was conceived that steam could be made a motive power, or the brilliant conceptions of Arkwright's genius had shown how wonderfully and profitably that power could be employed, Manchester was celebrated for its manufacturing capabilities. About the year 1352, a number of Flemish artisans settled here, having been invited to England by Edward III.; and as early as 1552, in the fifth year of the reign of Edward VI., an act was passed for the better manufacture of Manchester cottons, which, odd as the intimation may now appear, were uniformly made entirely of wool, and so also were the goods called "Manchester friezes," and a curse or woe was denounced upon all those persons who made their cloths without wool. Even in 1650, the trade of Manchester is described as not being inferior to that of any place in the kingdom, consisting of the friezes and other species of goods used for clothing by the middle classes; and it is also mentioned, as a proof of the importance of the place, that "many thousand pounds' worth of foreign merchandise is every year introduced into this town, for which its own goods are sent out in exchange." Indeed, outward relations appear to have been very early cultivated by the enterprising inhabitants of Manchester; for, in 1641, a merchant, named Lewis Roberts, notices, in a little treatise, the fact, that "the town of Manchester buys the linen yarn of the Irish in great quantities, and weaving it, returns the same to Ireland to sell." But the great increase of this emporium of trade is to be ascribed to the two circumstances, of the invention of those wonderful machines of Arkwright and his compeers in genius, and the supply of that cotton from America, on which they were destined to effect so wonderful a transformation. Within the last fifty years, the business has grown till it is believed that the exports of Manchester alone cannot be less than the amount of £12,000,000 per annum. Up to the end of the last century, the whole of the fabrics, which are now commonly termed Manchester prints, were made from yarn spun by the cottagers scattered over the sides of the valleys and hills in the neighbourhood of the town. This yarn was often unattainable, and, when obtained, was frequently deficient in quality. The weavers in the town were consequently hindered from their work, until Thomas Highs, an operative residing at Leigh, in this county, succeeded, after long perseverance, in the formation of an instrument, humorously but not insignificantly called the "Spinning Jenny." Improvement was soon afterwards made upon the idea; the power-loom, the steam-engine, and the countless multitudes of other adaptations of mechanical science followed, until Manchester may, in the present day, be characterised as the most complete workshop in the world. The principal branch of business is cotton manufacture; but in so large a community, various other departments of trade are followed, and amongst them, and perhaps the chief beside it, is the weaving of silk goods; but there are of course, in addition, the businesses of printing, colouring, dyeing, and all those necessary for supplying the wants of so vast a mass of human beings as constitute the population of Manchester. Among the first of the buildings necessary for conducting such numerous and extensive transactions, is the Exchange, which, though of little architectural pretension, is the chief place where the merchants and manufacturers congregate for commercial objects. It is situated in Market Street, and was erected in 1809, but has recently been renovated and much improved. Most of the leading men in Manchester are members; and at high change, about one o'clock on Tuesday, the assemblage presents a very striking and interesting spectacle. The Portico, situated in Moseley Street, is a handsome edifice of the Ionic order. It was erected by subscription in 1806, and contains a reading-room, library, and the other intellectual appliances needed by an educated community. The institution called the Chamber of Commerce, consists of more than 350 of the first men of business in Manchester, who are associated for the protection of trade and manufactures; they meet in the Arcade, Town-hall Buildings, King Street. The Corn Exchange, erected in 1837, at an expense of £3,250, stands in Hanging Ditch; it is a spacious and handsome Ionic structure, with a well-lighted hall, measuring about 80 feet by 70, divided into three avenues by ranges of stands for the corn-merchants, two ranges of lights, and ornamental cast-iron pillars. The markets for such a place as Manchester are necessarily numerous, and the endeavour to particularise them would only lead to confusion, without serving any particular object. The Manchester and Liverpool Railroad, and the other means of access to the town, will be noted in another part of the work, under the heads of IRWELL, RAILWAYS, &c. "By a recent order in council, it was directed that, on the next vacancy, the bishoprics of St. Asaph and Bangor be united, and that, on the occurrence of this event, a new bishopric of Manchester be erected, the collegiate church to become a cathedral, and the warden and fellows a dean and canons; the diocese to consist of the whole county of Lancaster, with the exception of the deanery of Furness and Cartmel, to be added to the diocese of Carlisle: the annual income of the bishop to be £4,500." "The chief, and for a long time the only, church in this now immensely populous parish, was the collegiate church above noticed, founded, it is said, and endowed, as a collegiate institution, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, St. George, and St. Denis, by Thomas de la Ware, clerk and curate of the parish, in consequence of his having succeeded to the honours and estates of his family, by the death of his brother, John, Lord de la Ware, in the 9th of Henry V. It was rebuilt in the reign of Henry VII., and still remains a noble specimen of the decorated style of Gothic architecture. The priory was suppressed at the general dissolution, when its revenues amounted to £226. 12s. 5d.; but in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, it was re-established under the designation of the Warden and Fellows of Christ's College, Manchester. Charles I., in 1635, granted them a new charter, with rules of government drawn up by Archbishop Laud. By this charter the management is vested in a warden, to be appointed by the crown, who must be a bachelor in divinity, or of canon and civil laws, and in four fellows, who must be masters of arts, or bachelors of laws. It also provides for the appointment of a sub-warden, treasurer, collector, registrar, a master of the choir, organist, four singing men, either clerks or laymen, and four boys skilled in music, to be chosen by the warden and fellows; and ordains that there shall be continually in the college two chaplains or vicars, of the degree of bachelors of arts, and two clerks, to administer the sacraments, visit the sick, and perform other religious offices. During the Commonwealth it was dissolved by an act of parliament, but was revived at the Restoration under the above-mentioned charter. This celebrated church is situated on the banks of the river Irwell, on the Strangeways road. Much of it has been rebuilt. The walls exteriorly and interiorly are profusely adorned with the grotesque figures so strangely prevalent in churches built in the dark ages. The interior is spacious and comfortable; like cathedrals themselves, only a portion of the edifice is devoted to public worship. The windows are filled with beautiful stained glass, and there are numerous and curious monuments. The choir, though covered with carved representations of the most ludicrous description, is one of the finest in the empire. In the tower there is a fine peal of bells, nearly as ancient as the church itself. Trinity church, at Salford, was founded and endowed in 1635, by Humphrey Booth, Esq. It has been rebuilt in the Grecian Doric style of architecture, but does not demand further notice; indeed, hardly any of the churches in Manchester and Salford are in any way remarkable. They are in general modern, and several of them have been erected by the commissioners for building new churches. Parochial districts have been recently assigned them. St. Ann's was founded in 1709, under the auspices of Lady Ann Bland: the living is a rectory, not in charge: gross income, £390: patron, the Bishop of Chester.—St. Mary's, between Deansgate and the Irwell, was erected in 1756: the living is a rectory, not in charge: gross income, £166: in the patronage of the collegiate church of Manchester.—St. Paul's was erected in 1765: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £378: also in the patronage of the collegiate church, Manchester.—St. John's, Byrom Street, was built in 1769: the living is a rectory, not in charge: gross income, £290: patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Huntington.—St. James's was erected in 1787: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £189: patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Piccope.—St. Michael's was erected in 1789: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £72: in the patronage of the collegiate church of Manchester.—St. Peter's was erected in 1794: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £160: in the patronage of the collegiate church of Manchester, after three presentations.—St. Stephen's, Salford, was erected in 1794: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £155: patron, in 1835, Rev. E. Booth, till 1845, afterwards the collegiate church of Manchester.—St. George's was erected in 1798: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £254: patron, the Bishop of Chester.—St. Matthew's, Castlefield, was built in 1823 by the parliamentary commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £271: in the patronage of the collegiate church, Manchester.—St. Philip's, Salford, was erected in 1825, also by the parliamentary commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £441: in the patronage of the collegiate church, Manchester.—St. George's, Hulme, was erected in 1828 by the parliamentary commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £247: in the patronage of the collegiate church Manchester.—St. Andrew's, Ancoats, has been since also erected by the parliamentary commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £164: in the patronage of the collegiate church, Manchester. The chapel of St. Thomas, at Ardwick, was consecrated in 1741.—The dissenting chapels in such a place as Manchester, are, of course, numerous and important, and some of their fabrics are very imposing edifices. The religious societies, also, in connection with the several religious bodies, stand among the first of the kingdom, as do also the remedial institutions for the defects both of body and mind. Among the most valuable of these are the Church Clothing Society, the Samaritan Society, the Salford Dorcas Society; the Sick and Friendly Societies or Clubs, amongst which are the Manchester Unity of the order of Odd Fellows, with branches throughout England, Scotland, and Wales, and numbering in March, 1840, no less than 144,442 members: in 1833, the number of members in this excellent society had only reached 38,797. The Commercial Clerks' Society is a benevolent and useful institution, established in 1802, for mutual aid in sickness, and for behoof of widows and orphans. From annual subscriptions of £2. 2s. raised amongst the members who reside in Lancashire and the adjoining counties, and from admission-fees of £6. 6s., and other sources, revenues are collected which enable the society to expend no less than considerably above £30,000 per annum, on the objects of the institution. The District Provident Society, above noticed, is also valuable as a charitable as well as a moral institution. Besides numerous other charities which cannot be here particularised, there are bequests for distribution to the poor in bread, clothes, money, &c., and for various other purposes, to the amount of no less than about £5,000 per annum. The most valuable of these are—Clarke's Charity for distribution in linen, blankets, money, &c., yielding, at the period of the charity inquiry, £1,795. 9s. 8d. per annum;—Maye's Charity for distribution in victuals, clothing, money, or otherwise, yielding £429. 18s. 6d. per annum;—the Charities of Humphrey Booth the elder, and Humphrey Booth the younger, to the township of Salford, for distribution amongst the poor of Salford, and for the repair of Salford chapel, yielding £1,533. 14s. 3d. per annum. The Royal Infirmary, Dispensary, and Lunatic Asylum, constitute a threefold charitable institution of a noble and beneficent character. The edifice occupies an extensive area in Piccadilly. It is handsomely faced with stone, and forms a splendid ornament to the centre of the town. This excellent institution was founded in 1752: it is extensively useful. The number of in-patients in the infirmary alone, in 1838, was 1,926; out-patients, 12,542; home-patients, 4,874. In the Lunatic Asylum, considerably above 1,000 patients have been cured since its establishment. The Salford and Pendleton Royal Dispensary is a neat brick edifice in Chapel Street, Salford, opened in 1827. Upwards of 4,000 cases were treated here in 1838. The Chorlton-upon-Medlock Dispensary, established in 1826, occupies a wing of the town-hall of the township of Chorlton-upon-Medlock: it is also extensively useful. The House of Recovery in Aytoun Street, Portland Street, was established in 1796; the Lying-in Hospital in Stanley Street, Salford, in 1790. Other institutions of this class are the Lock Hospital in Lloyd Street; the Eye Institution, established in 1815; the Baths, alluded to in the next section; the Humane Society, &c. We may here notice the Night Asylum for the destitute poor, opened in 1838, during which year no less than 17,406 individuals, men, women, and children, were sheltered and relieved. In addition to these social advantages, Manchester can boast of her several literary and scientific societies, which are led and attended equal to any other in the kingdom. The Royal Institution of Manchester was founded in 1823, for the encouragement of science, arts, and literature. The management is vested in a president, twelve vice-presidents, and a council of twenty-four, annually chosen by the members. The objects of the institution are effected by courses of popular lectures, collections and exhibitions of paintings and sculpture, &c. The edifice, which is situated in Mosley Street, is a magnificent stone structure, in the Grecian style of architecture, designed by Barry, and erected at a cost of nearly £40,000, including the purchase of the site. The portico is hexastyle, exhibiting an elegant specimen of the Ionic order. The entrance-hall is highly architectural and beautiful; it contains numerous and choice sculptural casts, amongst which are copies of the Elgin marbles, presented by George IV., and a splendid full-length marble statue, by Chantry, of Dr. Dalton, the celebrated discoverer of the atomic theory, and an inhabitant of Manchester. Part of the basement of the edifice is appropriated to the use of the students in the School of Design. One of the rooms is fitted up with an organ, orchestra, and seats for the Choral Society. The theatre will accommodate 800 persons. The Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester was instituted in 1781. It consists of about 150 members, who hold their meetings in George Street. Dr. Dalton is president. The published transactions of this society have been highly celebrated, and even translated into various foreign languages: they constituted the vehicle through which the splendid discoveries of Dalton were first published. The members of this society are elected by ballot, and stand high in the general estimation of men of science. To these may be added, the Statistical Society, the Geological, the Architectural, the Botanical and Horticultural, the Natural History Society, and, if it be not a misnomer to call it a society, we may say that several gentlemen have associated themselves to support the Victoria Gallery, an institution which was opened for the encouragement and illustration of practical science. Among so wealthy a community, the theatre, the assembly-rooms, the concerts, and all the other places of polite resort, are, it is needless to say, supported in a first-rate manner. The colleges and schools are both numerous and important. Manchester College, which is in connection with the University of London, is chiefly supported by the Independents. Lancashire Independent College has lately been established at Wilkington, at a cost of about £30,000, and is principally intended for the education of sons of Protestant dissenters. The Manchester town-hall in King Street, a noble edifice, was erected at the expense of £40,000. Its principal entrance is an elegant colonnade, with a rich entablature, having in the front various representations of the town of Manchester, beautifully sculptured with emblems of trade and commerce. A noble apartment, 138 feet long, divided by two ranges of Ionic columns, is devoted to the transaction of the public business of the town: it is surmounted by three elegant domes, embellished with allegorical representations, and the walls are lined with some beautiful paintings. The town-hall in Salford is also a handsome building of stone, with a portico in the Doric style: it was erected at an expense of £10,000, and contains all the offices necessary for the comfortable transaction of public business. The town-hall of Chorlton-in-Medlock, in Cavendish Street, though not so imposing as the other two buildings, is a chaste and pleasing edifice: the expense of its erection was £4,500. Until October, 1838, when it received a special charter of incorporation, Manchester had no separate jurisdiction, being governed by a boroughreeve and two constables; but by the general Municipal Act, the direction of the town was vested in a mayor, sixteen aldermen, and forty-eight common councillors. Salford was not included in the general Municipal Act, but was suffered to retain its boroughreeve under the authority of its ancient charters. Under the general Reform Act, Manchester returns two members to parliament, and Salford one: the parliamentary boundaries of Manchester, comprise the townships of Manchester, Chorlton Row, Ardwick, Beewick, Hulme, Cheetham, Bradford, Newton, and Harpur Hay; those of Salford include the townships of Salford, Broughton, Pendleton, and part of Ponglebury, the returning officers being respectively the mayor and boroughreeve. Among the distinguished natives of Manchester was Dr. Dalton, the discoverer of the atomic theory of chemistry, and Drs. Henry, father and son, both of whom were also distinguished chemists. — Contains 34,260 acres: 45,665 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 353,390: ass^d. prop^r. £575,206: poor rates in 1838, £76,512. 14s. — Market days: Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Mr. Chamberlayne, whose original name was Ackerley, assumed that which he now bears by act of parliament, on succeeding to the extensive estates and manorial rights of his maternal uncle, the late John Chamberlayne, Esq. The Chamberlayne family is descended from John, Count de Tankerville, of Tankerville Castle, in Normandy, who accompanied the Conqueror in his invasion of Britain, but returned to his extensive possessions in his own country immediately after the completion of the conquest of the Anglo-Saxons in England; his family being nearly allied to the Montmorency branch of the royal family of France, John, son of the Earl of Tankerville, being lord chamberlain to Henry I., was father to Richard, lord chamberlain to King Stephen, through whose warranty he assumed the title of his office as his own name, and from him was descended, through a long line of distinguished ancestry, the late proprietor of Mangersbury, one of whose progenitors was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in the time of Queen Elizabeth. By his father's side, the present owner is descended from an old family, many of the members of which have become distinguished in the profession of the law.

Mr. Lowten is a magistrate of Cheshire.

MANNINGFORD-ABBOTS, WILTS, a parish in the hun^d. of Swanborough, union of Pewsey, on a branch of the Avon: 75 miles from London (coach road 80), 2 from Pewsey, 10 from Devizes. — Gt. West. Rail. to Hungerford, thence 14 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Hungerford, &c., 148 miles. — Money orders issued at Pewsey: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — The living, a rectory in the archd^y. of Wilts, and diocese of Sarum, is valued at £9. 10s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £300: patron, Sir F. Ashley, Bart.: pres. incumbent, F. B. Ashley, 1810: contains 960 acres: 31 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 148: ass^d. prop^r. £1,365: poor rates in 1838, £52.

MANNINGFORD-BOHUN, WILTS, a tithing in the parish of Wilsford: 81 miles from London, 3 from Pewsey, 2 from Pevensey. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — Contains 1,140 acres: 29 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 283: ass^d. prop^r. £1,603: poor rates in 1838, £66. 18s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

MANNINGFORD-BRUCE, WILTS, a parish in the hun^d. of Swanborough, union of Pewsey: 81 miles from London, 12 from Amesbury. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — The church, which is one of the few ecclesiastical edifices existing shortly after the invasion of William I., presents a model of the smaller churches in Normandy. There is a curious monument at the end of the chancel of Mrs. Lane, who materially promoted the escape of Charles I. after the battle of Worcester. — The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the archd^y. of Wilts, and diocese of Sarum, is valued at £10. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £233: patron, T. Barnard, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Alexander Grant, 1845: contains 1,200 acres: 49 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 265: ass^d. prop^r. £983: poor rates in 1837, £53. 10s.

MANNINGHAM, WEST RIDING, YORK, a township in the parish of Bradford—(which see for access, &c.): 198 miles from London, 2 from Bradford, 7 from Halifax. — Money orders issued at Bradford: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. — The inhabitants are almost entirely engaged in the manufacture of woollen cloths. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Ripon: pres. net income, £150: patron, Crown and Bishop alternately: pres. incumbent, W. Hilton, 1846: contains 1,240 acres: 676 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 5,622: ass^d. prop^r. £3,942: poor rates in 1838, £433. 16s. — Manningham Hall is the seat of Ellis Cunliffe Lister Kay, Esq., who has another seat in this county, called Fairfield Hall. This gentleman, whose original name was Cunliffe, assumed that of Lister on succeeding to the estates of the family of his first wife, and that of Kay on the death of the father of his second lady in 1841. Mr. Kay's own family of Cunliffe has a common origin with that of Sir Robert Cunliffe, Bart., of Liverpool, both of them deriving from an ancestor whose descendants have been settled in Lancashire so far back as prior to the year 1282.

MANSFIELD, NOTTINGHAM, a parish and market town in the north division of the wapentake of Broxton, union of Mansfield, on the river Maun: 147 miles from London (coach road 138), 14 from Nottingham. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Nottingham to Mansfield station: from Derby, through Nottingham, &c., 34 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. Mansfield, which is an ancient town, consists principally of three streets, with other smaller ones diverging from them. The houses generally are built of a dark-coloured stone, which is quarried in the neighbourhood. There is no doubt but that Mansfield is justified in boasting of a very early antiquity, and from its site close to, or rather as it was then, upon the now neighbouring forest of Sherwood, there is every reason to believe that the early British inhabitants had an important settlement here; that it was a Roman station is proved by the discovery of many Roman coins of the Emperors Vespasian,

Constantine, and Marcus Aurelius, and other sovereigns of the lower empire, by the exploratory camps, which are numerous in its vicinity, and by a Roman villa, which was found here in a very complete state of preservation at the beginning of the present century. After the retirement of the Romans it seems to have flourished during the whole period of the existence of the Saxon heptarchy, being a favourite place of sojourn for the kings of Mercia. It was a royal demeane in the time of Edward the Confessor, and was frequently the residence of the Norman monarchs, one of whom, William Rufus, gave the church and all its possessions to the cathedral of St. Mary at Lincoln. The church is a neat and commodious building in the later Gothic style, and contains several pleasing monuments and interesting monumental brasses. The streets are lighted with gas and well-paved. The chief buildings are the town-hall, erected in 1836, a fine edifice of stone, having an illuminated clock in the centre of the front, and a pretty though small theatre; the former containing apartments for the transaction of public business, and an elegant assembly-room. Mansfield is one of the first places in the kingdom for the making of malt, but many of the inhabitants are engaged, like those of the surrounding district, in the manufacture of cotton and worsted hosiery. There are also iron foundries for light castings on a large scale, and a double tramway has been constructed from Bull's Head Lane to Pinxton on the Cromford Canal, a distance of about eight miles, with a branch to Codnor iron-works, which has been of great service to the trade of the town. The free grammar-school was founded by Queen Elizabeth; attached are two scholarships of £10 each at Jesus College, Cambridge. In 1724, a school was endowed by Mrs. Faith Clarkson, also spoken of elsewhere, and another was endowed subsequently by Mr. Charles Thompson, for the education of thirty boys and thirty girls. There are chapels here belonging to the Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, the Presbyterians, and Society of Friends. Mansfield is the principal place of election for the northern division of the county. A workhouse has been erected here, which is capable of accommodating 300 persons; the Mansfield poor-law union comprises eighteen parishes, with a population of about 26,000 persons, spread over an area of 89 square miles. Robert Dodsley, the author of the once singularly popular work, "The Economy of Human Life," and who, from being a humble footman, raised himself to great opulence, and the highest respectability as a bookseller, was a native of this neighbourhood. There are several very genteel residences in the vicinity of the town. The living (St. Peter), a vicarage in the diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £7. 7s. 6d.: pres. net income, £360: patron, Bishop of Lincoln: pres. incumbent, T. L. Cursham, 1813: contains 9,070 acres: 1,889 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 9,788: probable popⁿ in 1849, 11,256: ass^d prop^y £13,326: poor rates in 1837, £2,236. 7s. Market day, Thursday. MANSFIELD-WOODHOUSE, NOTTINGHAM, a parish and village in the northern division of the wapentake of Broxton, union of Mansfield: 140 miles from London, 2 from Mansfield, 11 from Worksop.—(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)—The Blue-coat school here was endowed conjointly with that of Mansfield by Mrs. Faith Clarkson; and another school here was endowed in 1828 by Mr. Radford. The inhabitants are largely engaged in the manufacture of cotton and worsted hosiery. A number of Roman remains have been discovered in the village and its neighbourhood, one of which, an elegant mosaic pavement, was in a state of fine preservation. There is hardly a section of dissenting Christians which has not a chapel here.—The living (St. Edmund), a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £40. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £94: patron, Duke of Portland: pres. incumbent, W. There are some other trifling charities.---The living (St. Margaret), a vicarage in the arch^d and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £12. 10s.: pres. net income, £878: patron, Eton College: pres. incumbent, Lord Augustus Fitzclarence, 1829: contains 4,040 acres: 102 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 481: ass^d prop^r £3,958: poor rates in 1838, £251. 17s.---The village derives its chief importance from the Hall, a fine edifice in the Elizabethan style of architecture, standing on a pleasant lawn, and the seat of Michael Henry M. Blount, Esq., the present representative of one of the most ancient and distinguished families in the country. Sir Alexander Croke traces it from the Guisnes in Picardy, a race of nobles descended from the Scandinavian rulers of Denmark. Rodolph, third Count of Guisnes, had three sons by his wife, Rosetta, daughter of the celebrated Count de St. Pol, all of whom accompanied the Conqueror into England, and shared amply in the spoils of his conquest. The younger of these three, Sir William Blount, was a general of foot at the battle of Hastings, and was rewarded by the grant of seven lordships in Lincolnshire. His son afterwards became settled at Saxlingham in Norfolk, and the great-granddaughter of that gentleman, Maria le Blount, sole heiress of her line, marrying, during the next century, a descendant of the elder brother of her own immediate ancestor, united the families of the two brothers. From them, through a most distinguishing ancestry, was descended Richard Blount, Esq., who, having married Elizabeth, only daughter and heir of William de la Ford of Iver, in Buckinghamshire, by which he acquired that place, purchased the manor of Maple-Durham, where he fixed his permanent abode, and from him the present proprietor is a lineal descendant. Mr. Blount, who succeeded to the estates in 1821, and who filled the office of high sheriff of Oxfordshire in 1832, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county.

H. Allen, 1835: contains 2,800 acres: 31 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 275: ass^d prop^r £2,854: poor rates in 1838, £122. 13s.

MARAZION (OR MARKET-JEW), CORNWALL, a market town in the parish of St. Hillary 304 miles from London (coach road 318), 3 from Penzance. — Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 74 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Bristol, &c., 332 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 6 p.m.: post closes 10 p.m. — This place is called by Leland, though it does not well appear upon what authority, "Marhasdagthou," or "Forum Jove's," a double signification of Jewish and Roman, or, rather, of Roman-Jewish origin; and by the old editors of Lyson's Magna Britannia, "Market-Jupiter, i.e. Market-Jew, or rather, Ju;" the term, whatever it may have really been, being supposed to be derived from the place and neighbourhood having been frequented as a mart of traffic by the Jews, a not unnatural supposition, when it is recollected that we have sufficiently authentic data that the Phœnicians traded here for tin before the Christian era. Marazion, which is but irregularly built, is very pleasantly situated on the eastern side of Mount's Bay, and its climate is peculiarly mild and salubrious. It is said to have been at one time of considerable consequence, but suffered more than once from conflagration. The trade consists principally of the imports of timber, coals, and iron, for use in the neighbouring mines; but during the season, the pilchard fishery off the coast, which is generally very prolific, occupies many of the inhabitants, and, throughout its continuance, gives great life and animation to the town. The parochial charities produce about £10 a year, of which the greater half is applied to educational purposes. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists, all have chapels here. In the time of Queen Elizabeth, Marazion obtained a charter, by which the government of the town was vested in a mayor, eight aldermen, and twelve capital burgesses, with power to hold a weekly market; but it has not been included in any of the schedules of the municipal reform act. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter: pres. net income, £44: pres. incumbent, J. M. Bartlett, 1847: contains 251 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,683: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,500: ass^d prop^r £3,454: poor rates in 1838, £220. 9s. — Market day, Saturday. MARGATE, KENT, a member of the town and cinque-port of Dover—(which see with HASTINGS)—is situated in the lower half-hun^d of Kingston, Isle of Thanet, lathe of St. Augustine, union of the Isle of Thanet: 101 miles from London (coach road 71), 16 from Canterbury. —Sou. East. Rail. to Margate station: from Derby, through London, &c., 233 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4½ p.m.: post closes 7½ a.m. and 9 p.m. —Margate is situated not far from the mouth of the river Thamez, and is chiefly known as a watering-place, very largely frequented during the summer season by the middle classes of the inhabitants of London, for whose cheap access to it there are great facilities both by steamboat and railway. It stands pleasantly on the declivities of two hills, and along the valley spread out between them. Its name is supposed to have been derived from Meregate, a term signifying an opening from a meer, or lake, or marsh, into the sea; and it was originally an obscure and insignificant village occupied by fishermen. Another detached village, called Lucas Dene, occupied the lower ground, leading from where is now the pier; but the whole district has now become consolidated into one compact town, the principal improvements having taken place since about 1787. Gradually Margate has grown into importance; its fine sands, pure and transparent sea water, its pleasing aspect up towards the German Ocean, and downwards to the English Channel, combined with its healthy and exhilarating climate, have long contributed to its prosperity, and the welfare and enjoyment of its visitants. It can now, therefore, boast of many fine streets and squares, while the older portions of the town have been very largely improved. The town is now generally well paved and lighted with gas; and, during the summer season, with its numerous places of reunion, is one of the pleasantest places in the kingdom for the restoration or enjoyment of health and spirits. Abundance of water is supplied from springs in the town and neighbourhood. The town-hall and market-place were rebuilt in 1821. At the south side of Cecil Square are the assembly-rooms, an elegant building of the Ionic order, with a piazza formed by Doric columns; the interior contains every provision for social enjoyment. The theatre, a neat structure, built at an outlay of £4,000; the public library, in Hawley Square; and other institutions of a similar character, are all great ornaments to the town. The church, anciently a chapel to the mother church at Minster, stands on a height a little to the south-east of the town; it is interesting from its antique simplicity. The new church, a curacy to the vicarage of St. John's, stands on the opposite hill. It is a Gothic structure of very great beauty, erected at an expense of £26,000; it is in the patronage of the vicar, and its net income is about £220 a year. There is hardly a section of the dissenting community which has not one or more chapels in the place. Almshouses for aged women were founded here in 1707, by Mr. Michael Yoakley; but the buildings having become dilapidated, the trustees purchased ground at Stoke-Newington, and removed the charity there. There are ten inmates, each of whom receives 5s. a week, and a ton of coals once a year. In accordance with the will of the same benevolent gentleman, almshouses for nine poor persons were also founded at Drapers, in the Isle of Thanet, the inmates of which enjoy the same allowances. The income of the charity from that source is nearly £800 a year, to which is to be added the interest of £300 stock, bequeathed, in 1824, to the Drapers almshouses, by Mr. James Thaddy, who also left £1,450 stock in the three per cent. consols, for the benefit of poor seamen of this parish and their widows. In 1792, a sea-bathing infirmary, projected by Dr. Letson, was established at Westbrooke, near Margate, in order to enable poor patients to partake of the benefits of sea-bathing. The harbour of Margate lies between two extensive flats of chalk rocks, the Nayland on the west, and the Fulsam on the east, both of which are covered at high water. This natural bay, however, is too flat in its contour, and an artificial haven has therefore been formed, by a very fine pier of stone, with a parapet wall, which, from the eastern side of this indentation, runs out in an irregular curvilinear direction towards the westward, leaving the entrance an open roadstead to the north-westward. Spring-tides ebb outside the pier, and leave the harbour dry at low water; and a wooden jetty has therefore been run out from the head of the pier, to the extent of 1,100 feet, for the convenience of passengers landing and embarking from the numerous steamboats by which the place is frequented. There are openings between each plank of the jetty, to allow the water, when rising, to flow through, and thus, in tempestuous weather, to break the force of the waves. The stone pier, which has added greatly to the beauty of the town, as well as contributed to the utility of the harbour, was nearly rebuilt about twenty-five years since, at an expense of £100,000. It is divided into two ranges of building—one lower, for the transaction of ordinary mercantile business, and the other some feet above it, which is used as a lounge and marine promenade for visitors. The lighthouse is at the extremity of the pier. The rural as well as the town provisions for the enjoyment of visitors are numerous. The principal of them is Tivoli Gardens, grounds very pleasantly laid out, and the business of which is similar to that of Vauxhall Gardens in London. About a mile and a half to the south-west of the town is Dandelion, a beautiful rural spot, much frequented, and which is rendered the more interesting by the remains of a mansion and fortification, once belonging to the family after whom the place is named. At Salmstone Grange, in the vicinity, are the ruins of a chapel, formerly the property of the consistory of St. Augustine; and, about a mile and a half further off, stand those of Dene chapel, which was erected about the year 1230. The walks around Margate are exceedingly picturesque and pleasing, especially those to Kingston, Birchington, and the neighbouring villages. The living is valued at £8: contains 3,810 acres: 1,808 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 11,050: probable popⁿ in 1849, 12,707: ass^d prop^r £25,437: poor rates in 1837, £3,522. 18s.—Market days, Wednesday and Saturday.—Bankers: Cobb & Co.—draw on Barnett, Hoares, & Co.—Hotels: York, White Hart, Duke's Head, and Pier.

MARLBOROUGH (or MARLEBORGH), WILTS, a borough and market town in Selkley hun^d, union of Marlborough, situated on the banks of the river Kennet, south of the Ogmere, which falls into the Kennet at this place: 71 miles from London (coach road 75), 14 from Devizes. — Gt. West. Rail. to Hungerford, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Hungerford, &c., 159 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. — Of the origin of this town, nothing certain is known; some suppose it to be the site of the Roman station Cunetio, but it is now ascertained that the site of that post was to the south-east of Marlborough. If Marlborough was a town in the time of the Saxons, it could not have been a place of much importance, as it is not mentioned in any of their ancient records, nor have any vestiges of their habitation been discovered here. Shortly, however, after the Conquest, a strong castle was erected here, and during several successive reigns it was the scene of many interesting historical events, being the theatre where contests for the respective rights of the Empress Matilda and King Stephen were decided. It was, however, destroyed at a remote period, though at what particular time cannot now be ascertained; but even in the time of Camden very few vestiges of its walls remained. None of these can now be seen, and a handsome house belonging to Lord Hertford, but now converted into an inn, occupies its site; a conical mound in the garden shows where the keep once stood. The monastic institutions here were a Gilbertine priory, dedicated to St. Margaret, founded in the reign of King John, the revenues of which at the dissolution were £30. 9s. 6d.; a house of Whitefriars, founded, in 1316, by merchants of this town; St. John's hospital was founded in the reign of Henry II.; and St. Thomas's in that of Henry III., and annexed to the priory of St. Margaret in the reign of Richard II. It should seem also, says old Lambard, that there had bene a house of Carmelites; for Bale reporteth of one Thom. Dando, chief of that house, which about the year 1436, wrote the history of King Alfrede's life. As for the name, I take it to have arisen of the stoare of marble stone that is nigh it, although by others bothe the name and foundation be ascribed to the prophete Merlin, who, as Bale sayeth, lyeth buried there.

"Flos committum Wilhelmus obit, stirpes regia, longas Ensis vaginam cepit habere brevem.
Epitaphium Comitissæ Rodburno."

Marlborough has of late years undergone very considerable improvements. It consists principally of one long street, with piazzas extending nearly the whole length of the more elevated side, several streets diverging from it, being carried across the river Kennet by bridges. It is well paved and lighted with gas, but the houses are irregularly built. Some of them are of stone, but the majority are wooden erections, with those old strange-looking projecting fronts, which render most of such places so very picturesque and uncomfortable. The guildhall or market-house is built over the market-place. The church of St. Mary's is a very ancient structure, with a freestone tower. St. Peter's has a lofty square tower, with battlements and pinnacles, the roof being supported by light pillars. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Huntingdonians, have places of worship here. The free grammar-school was endowed in 1550, by King Edward VI., with the revenue of the dissolved hospital of St. John, the estate of which now yields about £200 a year; the master is appointed by the Marquis of Ailesbury. No one can be admitted on the foundation unless his parents have been burgesses of Marlborough, or resident in the town for the period of seven years. The scholars share alternately with those of Manchester and Hereford, in eighteen exhibitions at Brazenose College, Oxford, and in six at St. John's, Cambridge. The other charities produce about £73 a year. The corporation of Marlborough is of great antiquity, many of the privileges possessed by them being founded on prescription. The first incorporating charter was granted by King John, and this was confirmed and enlarged by several succeeding sovereigns, until the time of Queen Elizabeth, in the 18th year of whose reign the governing charter was granted. Under the late municipal act the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, under the usual corporate style; the boundaries of the borough include a portion of the parish of Presbute, which is also included in the parliamentary boundaries. Marlborough returns two members to parliament, the mayor being the returning officer. This has been the birth-place of several distinguished men, among whom the chief was Henry of Marlborough, the historian, who flourished in the early part of the 15th century; John Hughes, an inferior poet, but an admirable critic, and an excellent man, who was one of the writers for the Spectator; and Dr. Sachavere, who was prosecuted by the state for his Romanizing opinions, but was afterwards collated to the valuable rectory of St. Andrew's, Holborn: he died in 1724. The family of Spencer Churchill derive their title of Duke from this place. The Marlborough poor law union comprises fourteen parishes, with a population of about 9,000 persons, spread over an area of 66 square miles. — The living (St. Peter's) is a discharged rectory: St. Mary's, a discharged vicarage, rated at £10. 9s. 4d., net income £100, in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury, is valued at £12: pres. net income, £130: patron, Bishop of Salisbury: contains 170 acres: 544 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,391: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,901: ass^d prop^t £3,809: poor rates in 1838, £1,182. 19s. — Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Thames, over which a handsome suspension bridge was thrown in 1821, and from the number of trout to be here met with, is largely frequented by anglers during the summer season. The church is a new and handsome structure adjoining the bridge; it has a lofty steeple, and the interior is adorned with a richly-painted window over the communion-table. The Royal Military College was established here for some time, prior to its removal in 1813 to Sandhurst, in Berkshire. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. One of the schools here was endowed in 1628, by Sir William Borlase Warren, with property which now produces £50 per annum for it, and £12 per annum for another. Almshouses were founded in the time of James I., by Mr. John Brinckhurst, for six aged widows, each of whom receives three shillings a week, besides allowances for coals and garden seeds. The other charities produce about £158 per annum. Black silk lace and paper are manufactured here; and at Temple Mills, at a short distance from the town, there are some extensive copper and brass works, a mill for pressing oil, and some paper mills. Marlow formerly returned two members to parliament, but the parliamentary boundaries were extended by the Reform Act, and now include Little Marlow, Medmenham, and Bisham. The high constable is the returning officer. —The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £13. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £172: patron, Dean and Chapter of Gloucester: pres. incumbent, T. Robert Clayton, Bart., a pleasing and imposing mansion. Sir William derives his descent from Sir Robert Clayton, Knt., who filled the civic chair of London in 1679, and for nearly thirty years represented the city in parliament, being father of the city at his decease. During the reign of James II., Sir Robert having previously taken a prominent part in public affairs, was attainted in Ireland, and a large estate which he there possessed was seized upon, and put into hands from which the family were unable to recover it. On his attainder he retired to his seat at Malden, where he continued till the accession of the Prince of Orange, when he was selected by the city to compliment the new sovereign on his arrival. In reward for his constancy and public services, his son was created a baronet in 1731-2, and from him the present baronet is a direct descendant.

He was a descendant of the family of Bradshawe of Bradshawe, in Derbyshire; but was born at Wyberslegh, in the township of Marple, and parish of Stockport, in this county. Bradshawe served his clerkship with an attorney at Congleton, to which place he returned after having acted as a councillor in Gray's Inn, in London. The first time of his being employed by Government was in 1644; but two years afterwards he was more eminently distinguished, being appointed one of the three commissioners of the Great Seal for six months. He was afterwards elected president of the court for the trial of the king, an office to which his known attachment to republican principles most probably recommended him. He was subsequently placed in the office of chief-justice of Wales, and filled several other eminent appointments. On the restoration of Charles II., twenty-three persons, who had sat as judges on the king, were attainted, though many of them were in their graves. Among these was Bradshawe, who had died in 1659; and on the 30th of January, 1660-61, his body was taken up, and, together with those of Ireton and Cromwell, was hanged on a gallows at Tyburn, and their heads having been struck off, and placed on Westminster Hall, their mutilated remains were buried under the gallows. From him, through the maternal line, Mr. Isherwood is a direct descendant.

There is scarcely a corner of the earth to which the fame of Cook has not reached; and not only his own country, but all Europe, has been emulating and honouring the singular ability and discretion with which he conducted the enterprises to which he was appointed. To enter upon a detailed narrative of his life is quite beyond our limits, and it may therefore be enough to say, that he was one of nine children of honest but humble parents, his father being a labourer, and that he learned the first rudiments of education from a schoolmistress, but through the liberality of T. Skottowe, Esq. of Ayrton, near Stokesley, by whom his father was employed, he was sent to a schoolmaster, with whom he soon became proficient in the lower branches of learning, and was sufficiently adept in accounts to become the apprentice of a shopkeeper, named Sanderson, at a small fishing town near Whitby, called Staithes. He soon tired of that employment, and, leaving the counter, he bound himself apprentice to Messrs. John and Henry Walker of Whitby, members of the Society of Friends, who were engaged in the coal trade. Under them he served his apprenticeship, and was engaged for some years afterwards in the coasting business; but in 1755, the war breaking out, he thirsted for better things, and entered the Royal Navy, where he assiduously laboured to render himself fit for preferment; and his father having, through Mr. Skottowe's intervention, made interest with Sir Hugh Palliser, he obtained a good position. He sailed with Wolfe to Canada, and was employed by that intrepid general in taking the soundings of the St. Lawrence, before the fortified camp of Montmorency, acquiring great skill as a chart drawer. He subsequently acquired reputation as surveyor of Newfoundland and Labradore, and was ultimately lauded as an able mathematician, from a paper which appeared in the Philosophical Transactions respecting an eclipse of the sun. In 1768, he began his voyages of discovery with Sir Joseph Banks, Dr. Solander, and the eminent astronomer Mr. Green. In these he was engaged until 1776, when his death was occasioned by an affray with the savage natives of Owyhee, in the Pacific, his loss being lamented not only by his own country, but by all Europe.—The living, a vicarage in the archd^y of Cleveland, and diocese of York, is valued at £4. 18s. 9d.: pres. net income, £123: patron, Archbishop of York: pres. incumbent, Harrison Taylor, 1847: contains 3,430 acres: 77 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 381: poor rates in 1838, £140. 12s.

The surface of the island rises in some places to a considerable elevation, the vales being fertile, and the hills rich in minerals. The capital of this little but important domain is called New Town, and is situated at the foot of Garrison Hill, where there are a custom-house, a town-house, and a prison. Its harbour is defended by a pier, having from three fathoms to five fathoms water; but it is difficult of access. It is commanded by a small fort, called Star Castle. The church is at Church Town. Two of the schools here are partly supported by the Society for promoting Christian

Knowledge, and another is aided with £12 per annum by the Duchy of Cornwall. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Baptists both have chapels here. The Pilot's Fund Charity consists of about £365 government stock, the dividends of which are applied by the chaplain, churchwardens, and select vestry, to the relief of the widows of pilots lost by drowning. Numerous Druidical and other British remains have been met with on the island. —Popⁿ in 1841, 1,000: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,100.

Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. Matlock and Matlock Baths are two most beautifully and romantically situated villages, standing but a short distance from each other, on the banks of the river Derwent. The church is a very ancient structure, picturesquely placed on the verge of a precipitous rock, and embosomed in the foliage of some luxuriant trees; but a new church has, within these few years, been built on a very beautiful site, in the dale between the two villages. The houses at Matlock are built upon the steep acclivity of the mountain, rising above one another in gradual succession, and presenting to the eye of the stranger an aspect equally strange and pleasing. There is a good deal of the business of cotton-spinning, framework-netting, paper-making, the making of fluor-spar ornaments, bobbin-lace, and other similar articles; while many of the inhabitants find employment in the lead mines, of which there are several in the vicinity. The Independents, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, all have chapels here. The celebrity of Matlock arises chiefly from its medicinal springs, and the amazing beauty and grandeur of its scenery; the climate is also, in an eminent degree, salubrious. The springs are hot, though less so than those of Bristol, and are comprised in the old baths, with their beautiful terrace; and the new baths, pleasantly situated at the south end of Tufa terrace; the fountain gardens, so called from the water flowing into a neat circular vase, which is placed upon a pillar in front of the alcove. Most of the structures are of stone. The waters are believed to derive their heat from passing through a stratum of limestone, and it is only from one particular level that they can be best obtained, for above and below that height they are cold, or nearly so. Their medicinal qualities consist in being impregnated with carbonic acid, and muriates and sulphates of lime, magnesia, and soda; they are principally efficacious in those complaints called nervous and glandular, for which medical science has as yet discovered no other efficient relief. There are also three petrifying wells here, in which all sorts of things are placed, for the purpose of being encrusted with the limy deposit. There are two excellent museums here; and, otherwise, Matlock baths are well furnished with appliances for the comfort and enjoyment of visitors. The romantic scenery of Matlock dale is viewed to most advantage when approached from the bridge near its northern extremity; as its beauties then succeed each other in a gradation which renders their grandeur and effect more impressive. The attention is first arrested by a vast rampart of limestone rock, clothed with yew-trees, elms, and limes, of singularly beautiful shapes and foli-

ago, from the recesses of which the church of Matlock displays its pinnacles. Further on the views become more interesting; and the High Tor, rearing its awful brow on the left bank of the river, bursts upon the sight in extreme magnificence. The height of this stupendous rock is upwards of 350 feet. The lower part is covered with small trees and underwood, of various foliage; but the upper part, for fifty or sixty yards, is one broad mass of naked perpendicular rock. The fragments that have fallen from this eminence form the bed of the river, which flows immediately below. The bed is so broken and disjointed, that the foaming waters roll over the obstructing masses with restless rapidity, and considerable noise. After sudden and heavy rains, the impetuosity of the current is greatly increased, and the sublimity of the view proportionally augmented. Immediately opposite to the High Tor, but rising with a less steep ascent, though to a greater elevation, is Masson Hill, which appears like a pile of immense crags—a Pelion upon Ossa. The summit of this mountain has been named the Heights of Abraham, and overlooks the country to a vast extent, besides commanding a beautiful bird's-eye view of nearly the whole dale. From this point even the High Tor loses its sublimity: but this effect is fully compensated by the variety of interesting objects included in the prospect. The height of this eminence is about 250 yards. The path to its summit has been carried in a winding, or rather zig-zag direction, and in various places, on each side, rows of firs have been planted, which, opening at convenient distances and at different elevations, admit the eye to range over the beautiful scenery beneath. The romantic cliff which forms the eastern boundary of the dale, is seen to much advantage from the old bath, where the river recedes in a curve from the road, and a little strip of meadow composes the foreground. This is finely grouped, and backed by a line of rock and wood, a mass of trees rising to the right, and shutting out for a short time all other features of the scenery. On crossing the river near this spot, it may be observed, that the natural beauties of the place have received some improvements from art. Three paths are seen, pointing through the wood in different directions: one of them, called the Lover's Walk, has been carried along the margin of the river, and is arched by the intermingled branches of the trees which enclose it. The others pursue a winding course to the summit of the rock, which is attained with little difficulty, through the judicious mode observed in forming the slopes, and placing the steps, though the acclivity is exceedingly steep. Luxuriant trees of various sorts interweave their fantastic roots on each side of the paths, and shelter them with their aspiring branches. These walks communicate with the pleasure-grounds and gardens of Mr. Arkwright. The prospects from the brow to the precipice are very fine.—The living (St. Giles), a rectory in the archd^y of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £11. 2s. 6d.: pres. net income, £320: patron, Bishop of Lichfield: pres. incumbent, W. MAXSTOKE, WARWICK, a parish in Atherstone division of the hun^d of Hemlingford, union of Meriden: 103 miles from London (coach road 100), 3 from Coleshill, 9 from Coventry. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Coventry, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through Rugby to Coventry, &c., 69 miles. Money orders issued at Coleshill: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. Here are the remains of the ancient and important fortress of Maxstoke Castle, built by William, Earl of Huntingdon, in the time of Edward III., and still in very excellent repair. It was constructed in the form of a parallelogram, with an hexagonal embattled tower at each angle, and is surrounded by a moat. It is evidently a place of immense strength, and has wonderfully resisted the wastings of time. About a mile south of the castle are the ruins of Maxstoke Priory, founded by the same nobleman for the order of St. Augustine; at the dissolution, its revenues were estimated at £129.

11s. 8d. per annum. Some small charities belong to the parish. The castle is now the residence of Captain Dilke, R.N. The living (St. Michael), a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £5. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £70: patron, Lord Leigh: pres. incumbent, H. The town is very pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, on the old road from London to Leeds. The houses are well built, and the streets are well paved and lighted with gas; the principal street being particularly wide and cheerful, and almost lined, on one side at least, with genteel residences. The church is considered one of the finest in the county; it is a spacious and lofty cruciform structure, having a handsome tower, partly in the English style, which rises from the intersection. At the west end there is a handsome porch, with a fine doorway. The Independents, the Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. The upper and lower free schools are supported by funds accruing from the town estates, and possess two exhibitions to Lincoln College, Oxford. Almshouses were endowed in 1638, by Mr. Robert Hudson, for six poor men, each of whom receives £2. 12s. per annum; and six poor women are also maintained in almshouses by the trustees of Storer's charity; the other charities produce about £99 a year. Melton acquires its chief celebrity from being the centre of a great hunt, and during the season is largely frequented by the nobility and gentry from all parts of the country. The parish consists of five large hamlets, named Garth, Gell-leydeg, Hoelch-Wormwood, Forest, and Taff-with-Cynon. The three hamlets first named meet at a place where the main mass of the town now stands; the other two hamlets are principally agricultural. The whole place has grown out of a blank moorland track of desolation, into life, animation, and bustle, through the discovery and use of the mineral treasures which the district contains. But still the population is chiefly of the working class; and Merthyr, therefore, with few exceptions, consists of long lines of cottages, emanating from groups, and running on every side up the hills, and down to the vales, wherever the convenience of the workmen might induce them to settle. The district is naturally bleak, rough, and sterile, but it has been greatly improved under the auspices of the ironmasters, many of whom have handsome residences in the neighbourhood. About the year 1755, the district attracted the attention of Mr. Anthony Bacon, member for Aylesbury, who obtained a lease of 99 years' duration from that date, expiring therefore in 1854, at a rent of £200 per annum, of a tract of land eight miles in length by five in breadth. On the premises he erected extensive iron and coal works, and soon accumulated a splendid fortune; after which he disposed of this mineral kingdom, by leases, to different parties, whereby the extent of the business and the population of the district have been wonderfully increased. The Cyfartha, the Dowlais, the Plymouth, and the Penydarren works, are all on the most extensive scale. At the Dowlais works, which are chiefly the property of Sir J. Guest, not less than between 4,000 and 5,000 persons are employed, and upwards of £24,000 a month are paid in the workers' wages; these, indeed, are believed to be the largest works of the kind in the world. It is needless to say that every known mechanical contrivance for expediting the processes of labour has been put into requisition. The educational institutions are commensurate with the necessities of the inhabitants. Merthyr returns one member to parliament. —The living, a rectory, with the curacies of Trinity and Cyfartha, in the archd^r. and diocese of Llandaff, is valued at £20. 5s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £675: patron, Marquis of Bute: pres. incumbent, J. It was erected in the early part of the 12th century, by Gilbert Norman, sheriff of Surrey. Old Lambard, in speaking of it, says — Matthew of Westminster sayeth, that in the year 1125, Gilbert, the founder of Merton, dyed: what this Gilbert was, he sheweth not; but Polydor sayeth he was a Norman, and came in with the Conqueror. I finde also, in a herald's note, that one Bartilmew Bulmer was the patron thereof. Howsoever it began, it is evident, that in the tyme of Hen. III. it was grown to great estimation: for heere held he sundry assemblies of the nobilitie, and, amongst other, one, wherein passed the lawes of parlement, called Statutum Merton. In this house also Gualo, the Pope's legate, concluded the peace between Henry III. and the Frenche Dolphin. In the reigne of the same kinge, the new chappell of St. Marie was buylded there. And in his tyme, Hubert de Borow, fearinge his displeasure, fled to Merton, wherewith the kinge was so muche offended, that he commanded the maior of London to ringe his motebel, and takinge with him the power of the citie, to pull him out by force. The citizens (that had before conceived hatred against him for the death of Constantine, whome he, beinge in great auctoritie, had justly executed for his sedition and outrage) flocked together to the nombre of 20,000, and makinge hast toward Merton, had wrought the kinge's will and somewhat more, had it not bene that the kinge gyvinge care to better advise, sent in at hast to countermand them. This priorie was valewed at 975 poundes of yearly revenue. During the parliamentary civil wars, the

MICHAEL'S (St.) MOUNT, CORNWALL, an extra-parochial chapelry in the hun^d of Penwith—(for access, &c., see MARAZION): 286 miles from London, 1 from Marazion, 4 from Penzance. — Money orders issued at Marazion: London letters deliv^d. 6½ p.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — St. Michael's Mount is one of those rare and commanding objects which arrest and fix the attention the moment they are seen. Its peculiar situation, and the sublime character it assumes, from appearing to rise immediately from the waves, singularly interest the imagination of the observer; though, when viewed from the land, its real magnitude is apparently diminished, from the vast extent of the horizon, and the expanded tract of water which surrounds its base. At high tides it appears a completely insulated congregation of rocks, rising to a considerable height, and gradually decreasing in size, till, assisted by the tower of the chapel on the summit, it assumes the form of a complete pyramid. At low water it may be approached from the shore, over a kind of causeway of sand and rocks, which are submerged by every rising tide, and the mount again rendered a perfect island. Some of the masses of rock in the intermediate space are immensely large, and all composed of granite of a close texture, with the felspar of a pinkish colour. The mount itself "consists of a hard granite, in which transparent quartz is the preponderating substance." There is also slate interspersed with granitic veins. Though the rocks of St. Michael are for the most part craggy and barren, yet the soil affords sufficient herbage to pasture a score of sheep, or upwards, for the whole year. It has also some plantations of fir scattered over its surface. The distant view of the mount excites ideas of impressive grandeur; but the effect is considerably increased when traversing its base, ascending its craggy sides, or slowly winding beneath its immense masses of pendant rocks. The prospects from the summit cannot fail to raise the most lively emotions, as the eye ranges over a vast extent of ocean; and, in boisterous weather, the scene is truly sublime. Sir Humphrey Davy, who was a native of Penzance, has thus celebrated St. Michael's Mount in his poem, entitled 'Mount's Bay':—

"Majestic Michael rises; he whose brow
Is crown'd with castles, and whose rocky sides
Are clad with dusky ivy; he whose base,
Beat by the storms of ages, stands unmov'd
Amidst the wreck of things—the change of time.
That base, encircled by the azure waves,
Was once with verdure clad: the towering oaks
Here wav'd their branches green: the sacred oaks,
Whose awful shades among the Druids stray'd,
To cut the hallow'd mistletoe, and hold
High converse with their gods."

The ancient tradition and popular belief, that St. Michael's Mount, in remote ages, stood surrounded by a wood, is not only countenanced by its ancient Cornish name, Carak-ludgh-en-lûz, 'the grey or hoary rock in the wood,' by which title it is thus mentioned by William of Worcester in 1490:— 'Apparicio Sancti Michaelis in monte tumba antea vocato, Le Hore Rock in the Wodd':—but evidence has been led, from the time of Leland to the present day, that a submarine forest, covered with gravel and sand, occupies the bed of the sea around the mount. This vicinity presents much to interest the geologist; and, indeed, certain points connected with the geological construction of the mount, and the relative antiquity of its slaty strata, have been the subject of a very hot theoretical controversy. It has been no less a subject of historical interest, both commercially and ecclesiastically. From the writings of the most learned, little doubt exists but that St. Michael's Mount, which Ptolemy calls Ocrium, was the ancient Iktas, or Ictis, whence the treasures of the tin mines of Cornwall were chiefly exported. That so sublime a place as the summit of this mountain should have early been selected as a place of worship, by those who found the sublimest habitudes of feeling in the wildest scenes of nature, is not surprising; and we accordingly find that it was a place of favourite resort for the early Britons. And when, through the diffusing light of Christianity, their superstition faded, the spot was eagerly seized upon by the sensuous imagination of the Roman Catholic priesthood, and, as early as the 5th century, St. Keyna, a holy virgin of the British blood-royal, made a pilgrimage to St. Michael's Mount. Upwards of 500 years afterwards, Edward the Confessor founded upon it a priory of Benedictine monks, which, after the Conquest, was augmented by Robert, Earl of Mortmain, and continued until the general dissolution, when its revenues were valued at £110. 12s. per annum. The monks having been frequently molested during their devotions, the mount was fortified in a castellated manner, and ultimately became a place of considerable military strength, proving highly important during the war between Charles I. and the Parliament. After the dissolution, the priory and its precincts became the property of the St. Aubyn family. — The living is a curacy in the archd^y of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, not in charge: contains 70 acres: 40 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 163.

Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 10.35 a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m. This is a place of very considerable antiquity. Middleham Castle was built about the year 1190, by Robert Fitz-Randolph, and afterwards became the property of the Earl of Warwick, known as "the king maker," and here he confined Edward, Prince of York, afterwards Edward IV., who contrived to effect his escape, and soon afterwards encountered and defeated his powerful enemy at the battle of Barnet. The castle becoming forfeited to the Crown, Edward gave it to his favourite brother Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III., whose only son, Edward, was born here. At what time the castle ceased to be habitable does not appear, but according to tradition it was dismantled by Oliver Cromwell. Its extensive ruins still constitute an object of great interest. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Richard, Duke of Gloucester, had license of his brother, King Edward IV., A. D. 1476, to found a college here for a dean, six chaplains, four clerks, and six choristers, and other clergymen officiating in the parish church, to be dedicated to the honour of the blessed Jesus, St. Mary, and St. Alkilda, which he never finished. The minister of the parish hath yet the title of dean, and enjoys several privileges, but there probably never were any chaplains, clerks, or choristers. The town, which occupies a gentle acclivity, rising from the banks of the river Ure, is built in the form of a square; it is highly respectable in appearance, and contains many good houses. The charities produce about £37 a year. Middleham Moor, about half-a-mile south-west of the town, is celebrated as a training ground for race-horses. The living, a rectory and royal peculiar, is valued at £15. 9s. 4½d.: pres. incumbent, (see Middleham Collegiate Church): the parish contains 2,400 acres: 187 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 930: ass^d. prop^r. £4,062: poor rates in 1848, £220: 13s. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 10.35 a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m.—This is a place of very considerable antiquity. Middleham Castle was built about the year 1190, by Robert Fitz-Randolph, and afterwards became the property of the Earl of Warwick, known as "the king maker," and here he confined Edward, Prince of York, afterwards Edward IV., who contrived to effect his escape, and soon afterwards encountered and defeated his powerful enemy at the battle of Barnet. The castle becoming forfeited to the Crown, Edward gave it to his favourite brother Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III., whose only son, Edward, was born here. At what time the castle ceased to be habitable does not appear, but according to tradition it was dismantled by Oliver Cromwell. Its extensive ruins still constitute an object of great interest. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Richard, Duke of Gloucester, had license of his brother, King Edward IV., A. D. 1476, to found a college here for a dean, six chaplains, four clerks, and six choristers, and other clergymen officiating in the parish church, to be dedicated to the honour of the blessed Jesus, St. Mary, and St. Alkilda, which he never finished. The minister of the parish hath yet the title of dean, and enjoys several privileges, but there probably never were any chaplains, clerks, or choristers. The town, which occupies a gentle acclivity, rising from the banks of the river Ure, is built in the form of a square; it is highly respectable in appearance, and contains many good houses. The charities produce about £37 a year. Middleham Moor, about half-a-mile south-west of the town, is celebrated as a training ground for race-horses.—The living, a rectory and royal peculiar, is valued at £16. 9s. 4½d.: pres. incumbent, (see Middleham Collegiate Church): the parish contains 2,400 acres: 187 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 930: ass^d. prop^r. £4,062: poor rates in 1848, £220: 13s.—Market day, Monday. Fairs: Easter-Monday, Whit-Monday, Nov. 5 and 6.—Principal Inns: Commercial and White Swan.—Middleham Castle is now the property of Thomas Wood, Esq. Middleham Hall is the seat of Christopher Topham, Esq., who derives his immediate descent from Lawrence Topham, Esq. of Caldbergh, in Coverdale, N.R., Yorkshire, who died about 1599. From that gentleman Mr. Topham is a lineal descendant.

West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, York, and Darlington, to Middlesborough: from Derby, through York, &c., 150 miles. — Money orders issued at Stockton: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. — This was, only a few years ago, an inconsiderable fishing village, but has, owing to the construction of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, and its branches, sprung up into a port of considerable note, there being more water here than there is at Stockton. Some time before the year 1830, a party of enterprising individuals conceived the idea of forming a flourishing town here, and for that purpose formed themselves into a company, and purchased 600 acres of land, which they laid out for building sites. On this ground the town has been built, having a large square in the centre, with streets diverging from it in every direction. At the close of the year above named the railway was opened, and the shipment of coals has been going on regularly and increasingly ever since. In addition to the commercial business, a pottery company have entered into extensive transactions, a foundry and two iron-works have been brought into operation, and an extensive rope and sailcloth manufactory, with power-looms, has been established. The town is well lighted with gas. Within the last few years a large and commodious dock, covering nine acres, has been constructed; it is entered by a channel from the Tees. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. — The living (St. Hilda) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y. of Cleveland, and diocese of York: pres. net income, £34: patron, T. West. Rail. through Crewe and Manchester to Middleton station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 93 miles. — Money orders issued at Manchester: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — Middleton, which is principally situated in a very fertile vale, was only a small village, but since about the year 1770, it has progressively advanced with the progress of our manufacturing interests, until it has become a large and thriving town, extending nearly a mile in length from north to south, on the road from Manchester to Rochdale. The manufactures carried on here are chiefly those of cotton fabric, but there are also a great number of plain sarcenets made, both species of goods being chiefly wrought on commissions from the Manchester capitalists. Coal mines are extensively worked in the vicinity of the town. The grammar-school founded here in 1572, by Dean Nowell, is partly supported by his endowment, and partly by the payments of the pupils. The other charities produce something more than £100 a year. Beside the several chapels-of-ease for the worship of those in connection with the Church of England, there are chapels for the Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, Lady Huntingdon's followers, the Swedenborgians, and the Unitarians. Manorial courts, leet and baron, are held here every year in October, at which two constables are chosen for the government of the town. — The living (St. Leonard), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Manchester, is valued at £36. 3s. 11½d.: pres. net income, £1,070: patron, Lord Suffield: pres. incumbent, R. MIDDLETON-STONEY, DERBY, a chapelry in the parish of Hathersage, on a branch of the Derwent: 164 miles from London (coach road 157), 4 from Bakewell, 11 from Sheffield. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Ambergate, to Rowsley, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through Ambergate, &c., 32 miles. Money orders issued at Bakewell: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. The village is very romantically situated at the entrance of Middleton dale, a wild chasm or valley, broken through rugged and jagged boundaries of limestone rock, extending for about two miles in length. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the hewing away of the limestone. The wild scenery of Middleton dale is often greatly improved by the fires of the limekilns, with which it abounds. At a short distance from the smelting-mill, a deep cavern enters the foot of the rock, near the side of the road. It was explored to the extent of about two hundred paces, when a deep water prevented all further progress. The roof is in some places so low, that the cavern cannot be penetrated in an erect position: in others, the passage is of considerable capacity, and it furnishes many beautiful crystallizations. An itinerant Scotch pedler, well known and much respected, who periodically attended most of the villages in the Peak of Derbyshire, was found murdered in this gloomy cavern: he had remained undiscovered until his corpse was nearly a skeleton. The living, a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £2. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £88: patron, Vicar of Hathersage: pres. incumbent, Urban Smith, 1834: contains 1,310 acres: 107 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 532: ass^d prop^r £1,438. Middleton Hall is the seat of the Right Hon. Lord Denman, late Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench.

MIDDLETON-STONEY, OXFORD, a parish in the hun^d of Ploughley, union of Bicester: 74 miles from London (coach road 57), 3 from Bicester, 12 from Oxford. Gt. West. Rail. to Oxford, thence 11 miles: from Derby, through Rugby and Banbury to Oxford, &c., 106 miles. Money orders issued at Bicester: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. The village is remarkably pretty; the cottages, erected at the cost of the Countess of Jersey, being mostly adorned with a rustic porch and a garden, giving them a neat and pleasing appearance. Within a few yards of the church formerly stood an ancient castle, most probably erected by the same nobleman who built the church. Though no portion of the structure now remains, the foundations may be perceived, and its formation may be plainly traced, especially on the north-east side, where there is a mound of considerable elevation. The living (All Saints), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £12. 16s. 3d.: patron, Bishop of Lincoln: pres. incumbent, R. Pretymann, 1819: contains 2,530 acres: 59 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 309: ass^d prop^r £2,311: poor rates in 1848, £108. 4s. —The present noble mansion, one of the principal seats of the Earl of Jersey, was erected on the site of a building which was destroyed by fire in 1753. The noble earl derives his descent from the ancient and honourable house of Villeurs, seigneurs of Lile Adam in Normandy, whence its chief members emigrated at the time of the Conquest. Six centuries subsequently it ranked among the most considerable gentry, serving the office of sheriff, receiving the honour of knighthood, and being among the earliest distinguished by a baronetcy. The first, however, who stands in the rank of nobility, was Edward Villiers, Esq., who, after having held several of the highest honours of the state, and among them that of governor of Munster, was created Viscount Grandison in 1620. His great-grandson, George, was created Lord Dunsmore and Earl of Chichester in 1644. His grandson, John, the fifth viscount, was created Earl Grandison of Limerick in 1721. Edward Villiers, Esq., grandson of the governor of Munster, was constituted master of the horse to Queen Mary in 1689, and elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Villiers of Hoo, and Viscount Villiers of Dartford, and was afterwards created Earl of the Island of Jersey, having filled several high offices of state. From that nobleman the present peer is a direct descendant.

MIDDLETON-IN-TEESDALE, DURHAM, a parish and market town in the south-west division of Darlington ward, union of Teesdale: the parish includes the townships of Forest and Frith, Middleton-in-Teesdale, and Newbiggin, and the chapelry of Eggleston: 293 miles from London (coach road 255), 9 from Barnard-Castle, 11 from Wolsingham. —Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, York, and Darlington, to Lyness, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 161 miles. —Money orders issued at Darlington: London letters deliv^d 1½ p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. —The town is singularly and irregularly built upon the jutting points and sides of hills, which enclose a valley or green patch at their base; the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the extensive lead mines which are wrought in the neighbourhood. The town-hall, a neat building, erected at the cost of the Earl of Darlington, has a marketplace under it. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, all have chapels here. One of the schools here is endowed with £13. 10s. per annum; the other charities produce about £28. 10s. a year. The environs abound with picturesque scenery of the greatest beauty, including fine falls of water, rocks, and caverns. About two miles above the town, where the Tees falls in numerous and striking cascades, is Wynch bridge, suspended on iron chains, and which is so hung as to induce the ordinary passenger to suppose he is traversing a loose rope stretched from rock to rock, over a chasm from 60 to 70 feet deep, and with the rushing torrent roaring and foaming far below his feet. Above Wynch bridge are the sublime cataracts of High Force and Caldron Snout. Middleton is one of the polling-places for the southern division of the county. —The living, a rectory in the archd^r and diocese of

Durham, is valued at £25. 17s. 1d.: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, J. H. ters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. —The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence, surrounded by hills of greater elevation, on the banks of the river Rother, which has been made navigable as far as Pulborough, where it joins the Arun, and thus has access to the sea. The houses are well built, and, from the peculiar salubrity of the climate, the inhabitants are remarkable for longevity. The principal business done is in agricultural produce, Midhurst having a large corn market. The church is in the later style of English architecture, and has a low embattled tower; it contains several interesting monuments of the Montague family. The grammar-school, founded in 1672 by Gilbert Hannam, has an income of about £40 a year; the other charities produce about £145 a year; but, besides these benefactions, there are several unendowed almshouses. Midhurst is supposed to be the Roman station Riba. It is a borough by prescription, having returned two members to parliament since the fourth year of Edward II.; but, on the passing of the Reform Bill, it was reduced to one member, while the boundaries of the borough were very greatly enlarged. It is a polling-place for West Sussex. The Baptists and Roman Catholics have chapels here. A little to the east of the town are the ruins of Cowdry House, once the magnificent seat of the Montagues, which was destroyed by fire in 1793; the grounds are still strikingly beautiful, and remarkable for their fine timber. The Midhurst poor-law union comprises 26 parishes, with a population of about 12,500, spread over an area of 95 square miles. —The living (St. Denis), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £20: pres. net income, £170: patron, Earl of Egmont: pres. incumbent, W. MILDENHALL (ST. ANDREW), SUFFOLK, a parish and market town in the hundrd of Lackford, union of Mildenhall, on a branch of the Ouse called the Lark, which is here navigable: 77 miles from London (coach road 70), 9 from Newmarket. East. Co^t. Rail. through Chesterford to Newmarket, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, and Cambridge, to Newmarket, &c., 155 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. Mildenhall is most agreeably situated on the borders of Cambridgeshire, and is bounded by the river Lark, by means of which it has excellent water communication with Lynn, both for the exportation

tion of the agricultural produce of the neighbourhood, and the receipt of those domestic necessities which are requisite for the supply of an inland population. The church is a large and handsome structure, having a roof of richly-carved wood-work, and a tower 112 feet in height, which was formerly surmounted by a spire, covered with lead: the chancel contains many monuments of the distinguished families in the neighbourhood. The town is lighted with gas, and altogether forms a very pleasing place of residence. The Baptists, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. In 1722, Sir Thomas Hanmer founded almshouses for four poor widows, and there are several minor charities. The town is governed by a high constable and subordinate officers; the petty sessions for the hundred are held here, and it is one of the polling-places for the county. The Mildenhall poor-law union comprises 13 parishes, with a population of about 8,000 persons, spread over an area of 95 square miles. The living (the Virgin Mary), a vicarage in the diocese of Ely, is valued at £22. 8s. 1½d.: pres. net income, £369: patron, Sir H. E. Bunbury: pres. incumbent, H. G. Bankers: Oakes, Bevan, & Co.—draw on Barclay, Bevan, & Co. Inns: Bell, and White Hart. Sir Edward Henry Bunbury is lord of the manor, and has a residence there. The original surname of this family was St. Pierre, and its founder in England, a Norman who attached himself to the fortunes of Sir Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, the Conqueror's nephew, and received as a reward for his services a portion of the manor of Malpas and other advantages, the manor of Bunbury being a part. The name of St. Pierre became extinct in the early part of the 15th century, and that of Bunbury was adopted. The immediate progenitor of this family was Alexander de Bunbury, who lived in the time of Henry III., and from him the present baronet is descended almost in a right line, and one of whose ancestors, Thomas Bunbury, Esq., was created a baronet in 1681. Sir Henry was under-secretary of state for the war department from 1809 to 1816, and sat for the county of Suffolk in two parliaments.

MILDENHALL, WILTS, a parish in the hundrd of Selkley, union of Marlborough: 69 miles from London (coach road 74), 2 from Marlborough, 16 from Swindon. Gt. West. MILEHAM, NORFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch: 13½ miles from London (coach road 104), 7 from East Dereham, 3 from Litcham. — Nor. and East. Co^r. Rail. to East Dereham, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Syston and Peterborough to Dereham, &c., 153 miles. — Money orders issued at Dereham: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. — Here are the remains of an ancient castle, supposed to have been built by Alan, son of Fload, to whom William I. gave the manor. Mileham was the birth-place of the great lord chief-justice of the King's Bench, Sir Edward Coke, who was born in 1549. He pleaded his first cause in 1578, and having married a sister of the minister, Lord Burleigh, speedily attained a high rank in his profession. In 1592, he was made solicitor-general, and, in 1600, attorney-general, when he conducted the prosecution against the Earl of Essex. In 1603, he was knighted, and shortly afterwards he conducted the prosecution against Sir Walter Raleigh, acting towards him, as he had done towards the unfortunate Essex, with an excessive degree of brutality. In 1606, he was appointed chief-justice of the Common Pleas, and, in 1613, he was sworn of the Privy Council, and removed to the Court of King's Bench. In 1616, he fell into disgrace, was removed from his office, and, for some time, was imprisoned in the Tower. He then joined the popular party, and, in 1628, represented the county of Buckingham in parliament, where he became conspicuous from his opposition to the Duke of Buckingham. He died in 1634, and a handsome monument, with a long Latin inscription, has been erected to his memory in Mileham church. — The living (St. John the Baptist), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £11. 1s. 10½d.: pres. net income, £513: patron, Rev. C. B. Barnwell: pres. incumbent, C. B. Barnwell: contains 3,110 acres: 66 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 532: ass^d. prop^r. £2,373: poor rates in 1848, £301. 9s. Tithes commuted in 1840.

MILFORD, HANTS, a parish in the hun^d. of Christchurch, New Forest, east division, union of Lymington: the parish includes the titlings of Efford, Keyhaven, and Pennington: 10½ miles from London (coach road 91), 3 from Lymington, 6 from Yarmouth. — Sou. West. MILFORD-HAVEN, PEMBROKE, a seaport in the parish of Stainton or Steynton, hun^d. of Rhos, South Wales: 274 miles from London (coach road 276), 7 from Pembroke. — Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow, to Swansea, thence 60 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Gloucester, &c., 265 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. — The town of Milford is of modern date, having been founded in 1790, under the authority of an act of parliament, passed to enable Sir William Hamilton to establish quays, docks, &c., with a market. It is situated on the north side of the haven, the name of which it bears, is elegantly and uniformly built, consisting principally of three streets, which run parallel to each other, and has a handsome church, market-house, one town-house, a dockyard, and all the necessary conveniences for an active port; the neighbouring village of Pill, where the sailors chiefly live, and Hubberstone, where there is an astronomical observatory, furnished with a complete set of instruments, adding greatly to the advantages of the place. But the progress of Milford was greatly checked at the close of the war, when the government establishments were removed to Pembroke; yet its excellent adaptation for the reception of shipping, which caused it to be retained as the chief place for customs, and the quarantine station, enabled Milford still to retain its position as a place of considerable importance. Milford-Haven is conceived to be one of the safest and most capacious harbours for shipping in the British dominions. It is formed by an inroad of the sea, inland to the depth of twenty miles from its mouth at Pembroke, and wears the appearance of an immense lake, with numerous creeks, roadsteads, and bays; and it is said that the whole of the shipping of the British empire, mercantile as well as naval, might ride together in safety on its waters. The trade of the port, besides the supplying of ships with necessities, consists chiefly in the export of stone, coal for drying malt, besides limestone and culm, in which there is a considerable coasting trade. The port extends from Laugharne to St. David's Head. There are bonded warehouses for all goods except tobacco and East India produce. Milford joins with Tenby, Weston, and Pembroke, in returning one member to parliament. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the diocese of St. David's: pres. net income, £80: patron, Hon. F. R. Greville: pres. incumbent, T. Brigstocke, 1825.

Sir John, who served for twenty years in the army, and was late lieutenant-colonel in command of the 52d Regiment of light infantry, received the honour of knighthood in 1812. The family of Tylden, which is of great antiquity, has for several centuries been seated in Kent, and, so far back as the reign of Edward III., we find William Tylden paying aid for lands in Kent, when the Black Prince was knighted. The family divided into three branches, the eldest of which settled at Milstead, the second removed into Sussex; and one of its members emigrating to America, there founded the numerous family of the Tildens in that country. The third settled at Wormsell in the time of Elizabeth, and ultimately purchased the manor of Milstead. Of this branch Sir John is now the representative; he succeeded to the estates in 1832, at the death of his father.

After receiving the rudiments of education at Salisbury and Lichfield, he was sent to the Charter-house, where he contracted his first intimacy with Mr. afterwards Sir Richard Steele. At the age of fifteen he was entered at Queen's College, Oxford, where he soon became distinguished for his classical attainments. At twenty-two he commenced his literary career, and having addressed a complimentary poem on one of the campaigns to Lord Keeper Somers, he was rewarded with a pension of £500 a year, to enable him to travel. On his return in 1702, he found his friends out of office, but being introduced by the Earl of Halifax to Lord Godolphin as a person fit to recite the glories of Blenheim, he produced 'The Campaign,' and was made a commissioner of appeals. He subsequently became connected with the Teller, started by Steele; the Spectator, in which he was the principal writer: and the Guardian, in the production of which he had a considerable share. In 1713, his famous tragedy of 'Cato' was produced, and had an almost unprecedented run of success. In 1716, Addison married the Countess Dowager of Warwick, but the union was replete with misery to both parties. The following year he became Secretary of State, but soon resigned that position for a pension of £1,500 a year. He died at Holland House in 1719, leaving one only daughter, who died unmarried in 1797. — The living (Virgin Mary), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Sarum, is valued at £12. 15s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £275: patron, P. Kent Rail. to Stroud, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 174 miles. — Money orders issued at Sittingbourne: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — This town, which is of great antiquity, is situated at the head of a creek, which opens into the channel between the isle of Sheppey and the coast of Kent. It has a port for barges, but the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the oyster fishery, which gives employment to above 100 dredgers; the Milton oysters being considered the finest in England. They are in great demand in London, whence they are sent to all parts of the country and the continent. A capital of £10,000 is employed in storing the ground with young oysters and brood. The Rutupian oysters, recorded by Juvenal as being so much esteemed by the epicures of his day, are believed to have been no other than Milton "natives," as they are called. Milton was anciently the residence of the kings of Kent, who had a castellated palace here. One of the schools here is endowed with £20 a year; the other charities produce about £44 a year. A workhouse has been erected here, which is capable of accommodating 500 inmates. The Milton poor-law union comprises 18 parishes, with a population of about 11,000 persons, spread over an area of 43 square miles. He was educated at Westminster School, whence he was sent to Christ Church, Oxford. In 1693, he was made chaplain to the king, and lecturer at St. Bride's, where, and at Bridewell, his eloquence obtained for him much notice. But his constant advocacy of High Church principles exposed him to great unpleasantry; and, in 1700, he became engaged in some serious controversies, in which, however, he conducted himself so well, that his university bestowed upon him the degree of D.D., and the lower house of convocation voted him their thanks. On the accession of Queen Anne, he was made her chaplain in ordinary, and received the deanery of Carlisle. He was successively made preacher of the Rolls Chapel, a canon of Exeter, dean of Christchurch, bishop of Rochester, and dean of Westminster. Hitherto his course had been one of uninterrupted prosperity, but, on the death of Queen Anne, his fortunes changed. He openly avowed his predilection for the Pretender, rendered himself, of course, obnoxious to George I., and was sufficiently active to involve himself in the consequences of a bill of pains and penalties, was obliged to leave the kingdom, and died in exile at Paris, in 1731. — The living (All Saints), a rectory in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £20: pres. net income, £500: patron, G. The town consists of three distinct assemblages of houses, arranged in the form of a triangle, each side extending to about two-thirds of a mile in length. The upper town comprises a number of poor streets, stretching up an acclivity called Minehead Point. The middle town forms the principal part of the whole, and contains many excellent houses, with several highly respectable inns. The third division is the quay town, or that portion close by the water, where are the custom-house and other offices of the port. The vessels frequenting Minehead are chiefly coasters, laden with corn, malt, flour, and timber, groceries from Bristol, coal and culm from Swansea and Newport, limestone from Wales, and live stock from Ireland. The town is governed by two constables, appointed at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. Having a fine beach, and being surrounded by scenery remarkable for its variety and beauty, Minehead has of late years been much resorted to, during the summer season, for health and pleasure. Formerly, it used to return two members to parliament, but it was disfranchised by the General Reform Act. — The living (St. Nicholas), a vicarage in the archd^y. of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, is valued at £18. 9s. 7d.: pres. net income, £200: patron, J. MONMOUTH, a parish, borough, county, and market town, in the hund^d of Skenfroth, union of Monmouth: 142 miles from London (coach road 130), 13 from Chepstow. Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse and Gloucester to Monmouth: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 133 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 8½ p.m.: post closes 7 p.m. Monmouth occupies an extremely pleasant situation, on a strip of land running between the junction of the rivers Monnow and Wye, surrounded by high hills and richly cultivated valleys; the eminences being, for the most part, clothed to the summit with wood. The town consists principally pally of one long street, with several smaller ones diverging from it; many of the houses being handsome residences, while the streets are paved and lighted with gas. The open space in the middle of the town, where the weekly market used to be held, being found inconveniently small, a new market-house has been built by the corporation, and a new town-hall has also been erected. The parish church occupies the site of a priory, which, about the year 1740, was partly taken down and reconstructed; the tower and the lower part of the spire being the only parts of the ancient edifice. The remains of this Benedictine priory now lie on the northern side of St. Mary's church. It was founded in the reign of Henry I., by Wihenoc, lord of Monmouth, and was a cell to the monastery of St. Florence, near Salmur, in Anjou. The priory-house, which is now converted into a private residence, contains an apartment which is said to have been the library of Geoffrey of Monmouth, who lived about the middle of the twelfth century. From him it is said Chaucer borrowed his legend of King Lear, on which Shakspeare built his play, and Milton his beautiful fiction of Sabrina in the Mask of Comus. Monmouth, or some spot in its vicinity, is supposed to have been the site of the Roman station, the Blestium of Antoninus; and it was undoubtedly one of the strongholds of the Saxons, when they desired to secure their conquests between the Severn and the Wye. It appears to have been heavily fortified; but, even in Leland's time, there were few vestiges of the walls, and now none remain, if we except some traces of the moat. King Henry V. was born here, and his cradle and the armour which he wore at Agincourt are preserved in Troy House, a mansion belonging to the Duke of Beaufort, at a short distance from the town. During the civil war, Monmouth was taken and garrisoned by the parliamentarians, after the battle of Marston Moor. The living of the parish is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford; rated at £9. 2s. 2d., returned at £145; gross income, £195; patron, in 1835, the Duke of Beaufort. The church is a handsome building, with an elevated spire; it contains many monumental tablets and a fine organ. There is also an ancient chapel of curious architecture, near Monnow bridge, to which no benefice was attached. There are an Independent and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel here, and places of worship for the Baptists, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics. In 1833, there were three daily, two boarding, and five Sunday schools. The free grammar-school was founded in the reign of James I. by William Jones, who bequeathed £9,000 for the endowment of a school and almshouses, and for the establishment of a lectureship; income, in 1833, £977. 1s. 7d. The almshouse consists of a long row of buildings, comprising twenty separate dwellings; the inmates, ten men and ten women, receive each 6s. 6d. weekly, and 15s. once a year for a gown. Other minor charities in 1833, £15. 10s. per annum. The principal business of the town consists in converting pig-iron into bars, and in making tin plates; but there is also a considerable trade carried on in the supply of domestic necessities for the surrounding neighbourhood. Timber and bark are also exported to Bristol and to Ireland, and on the neighbouring streams a number of mills have been erected for the manufacture of paper and the grinding of corn. The borough of Monmouth was first incorporated by Edward VI. in 1550, receiving privileges which were subsequently confirmed by James I., Charles I., and Charles II. Under the new Municipal Act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors. Under the Reform Act, Monmouth is joined with Usk and Newport in returning one member to parliament; the mayor is the returning officer. This is one of the polling-places, and the principal place of election, for the county. The Monmouth poor-law union comprises 32 parishes, with a population of about 20,000 persons, spread over an area of 121 square miles. — Contains 2,700 acres: 894 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 5,446: probable popⁿ in 1849, 6,262: ass^d. prop^y £12,963: poor rates in 1848, £1,446. 1s. — Market day, Saturday. MONTGOMERY, NORTH WALES, a parish, borough, and market town, in the hund^d of Montgomery, the capital of the county, situated on the eastern bank of the Severn: 216 miles from London (coach road 168), 9 from Newton. — Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton, Shrewsbury, and Oswestry, to Welshpool, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through Stafford, Shrewsbury, &c., 126 miles. — Money orders issued at Welshpool: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — The town of Montgomery is pleasantly situated on a rising ground, backed by an eminence, whence there is a rich and extensive prospect over the vale, extending to the hills of Shropshire. The streets are wide, and the houses for the most part are built of brick; the town, from its position, is always clean and pleasing of aspect, but remarkably secluded and inanimate. Leland thus describes its appearance in the 16th century:—The soil of the ground of the towne is on a mayne slaty rocke, and especially the parte of the towne hillinge toward the castell, now a late re-edified, whereby hath been a parke. Great ruines of the waulle yet aperse, and the remains of four gates thus called, Kedewen gate, Chirbury gate, Arthur's gate, and Kerry gate. In the waulle yet remain broken tourets, of which the white tower is the most notable. The castle of which he speaks, stood upon the extremity of an eminence on the northern side of the town, the projecting rock being very high; and it is said to have been a very imposing structure, though, from what remains, it is difficult to ascertain either its shape or extent, the present fragments being a small part of a tower, and a few low broken walls. Not far from the castle, upon a hill, there is an immense British camp, the approach to which was guarded by four deep ditches, with two or three entrances to the main work, where some fosses were formed across the hill. At the bottom of the hill there is a smaller fortification, with a raised mount in one part of it, supposed to be the site of a castle raised by Baldwyn, lord of the marches, for the town itself was called Tref-Baldwyn, or Baldwyn's town, in the time of the Conqueror. Its present name is derived from Roger de Montgomery, who afterwards took possession both of the town and castle. During the civil war, Montgomery was the ground of fierce contention, and was ultimately dismantled by order of the government. The church is an elegant structure, and contains an ancient and interesting monument to the memory of Richard Herbert, Esq., father of Lord Herbert of Chisbury. One of the schools here is endowed with £9 per annum, besides other benefactions granted by Earl Powis. The town was anciently incorporated under the style of "the bailiffs and burgesses of Montgomery," and the appointment of two bailiffs, an indefinite number of aldermen, a high-steward, a recorder, and other officers, was prescribed. Subsequently, the bailiffs were authorized to act as magistrates. Montgomery joins with Welshpool, Llanidloes, Newtown, Machynlleth, and Llanvyllin, in sending one member to parliament. — The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Hereford, is valued at Boyland Hall, a splendid mansion in the Elizabethan style, built in 1571, is the seat of F. W. Irby, Esq. It has a fine lawn, and is immediately surrounded by exquisite shrubberies and other pleasure-grounds. Admiral Irby, who was a younger brother of the present Lord Boston, acquired the Boyland estate by his marriage with Emily Ives, daughter and coheir of William Droke, Esq. of Amersham, the descendant of the ancient family of the Garneys, who were settled in Suffolk as early as the time of Richard I.

MORPETH, NORTHUMBERLAND, a parish, borough, and market town, in the western division of Morpeth ward, and eastern and western division of Castle ward, union of Morpeth, intersected by the river Wansbeck: the parish includes the townships of Morpeth, Buller's-Green, Catchburn, Hepscott, Newminster Abbey, Shilvington, Tramwell and High Church, and Twizell, and, in ecclesiastical affairs, the parochial chapelry of Ulgham: 319 miles from London (coach road 289), 14 from Newcastle. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, York, and Newcastle, to Morpeth station: from Derby, through York, &c., 187 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 2.35 p.m. Morpeth is situated in an agricultural district, which is not only rich in its soil, but also affluent in coal, timber, and freestone, which can be obtained in the vicinity of the town. The river Wansbeck flows eastward to the boundary of the municipal borough, which it skirts on the west, south, and east, and then, flowing through a series of vales beautifully adorned with woods, falls into the sea near Canboise, about 7 miles east of Morpeth. Being shallow and rapid, however, with a rocky bed, it is never likely to be of any commercial value to the town. On the south side of the town the river is crossed by a bridge, constructed after the designs of Mr. Telford, connecting the castle with other parts of the town. On the west a foot suspension-bridge has been thrown over to the bottom of Oldgate. The town consists chiefly of two principal streets, from which other smaller ones diverge, there being a good but insufficient market-place in the centre; the market cross, which is a commodious structure, was erected in 1699. Near the west side of the market-place there is an elegant clock tower, built of stone in 1714, at the expense of the Earl of Carlisle; it has a rustic piazza, and is finished with turrets. Morpeth is supplied with water from the springs at Tothill, the water being conveyed under the river by pipes. From its peculiar position, Morpeth has no manufactures, but is chiefly dependent for its support on its large cattle-market, and the supply of the surrounding district with domestic necessities. In a charter granted by Charles II., Morpeth is recognised as a borough by prescription; under the new municipal act it is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 common councillors, under the usual corporate style. Morpeth had sent two members to parliament from the year 1553, until the Reform Act reduced the number to one; the mayor is the returning officer. A free grammar-school was founded here in the reign of Edward VI., its present endowment is about £220 per annum; another school is chiefly supported by the corporation. The Morpeth poor-law union comprehends 72 parishes, with a population of about 14,500 persons, spread over an area of 147 square miles. The living (Virgin Mary), a rectory, with the curacies of Ulgham and Trinity, in the archd^y. of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, is valued at £32. 16s. 8d.: pres. net income, £1,611: patron, Earl of Carlisle: pres. incumbent, Hon. There was anciently a manufactory of tapestry here. The neighbourhood is now adorned with numerous villas and mansions, which are the residences of the higher classes of society, several elegant seats especially standing on the margin of the river. The church is an ancient but convenient edifice, founded in the 14th, but rebuilt in the 16th century; in 1840 it was greatly enlarged, giving much additional accommodation to the poor, and an organ was erected. Cromwell House, a spacious mansion, the late residence of Mrs. Aynscombe, was formerly the residence of Oliver Cromwell, when he was lord-protector. In the church are interred Sir John Barnard; Dr. John Dee, the famous philosopher and astrologer of the reign of Elizabeth; John

Partridge, the almost founder of almanacs, also famous as an astrologer, who was born a shoemaker, became almanac-maker, and finally physician to Charles II.; and John Barber, lord mayor of London, who erected the tomb to the memory of Butler in Westminster Abbey. Stone Lodge was built for George I. George III. had a royal farm here. One of the schools here is endowed with £47 per annum. In 1628, almshouses for six poor widows were endowed by John Juxton, Esq.; each of the inmates receives 2s. 6d. weekly. There are also some unendowed almshouses here. The other charities produce about £95 per annum. The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of London: pres. net income, £132: patron, Dean and Chapter of Worcester: pres. incumbent, H. H. MOUNTS-BAY, CORNWALL, an extensive bay in the English Channel, near Penzance. —It derives its name from St. Michael's Mount, which stands in the bay, near Marazion—(see article MICHAEL'S MOUNT.) As there incidentally remarked, there is reason to believe that at one time the channel of this bay was beyond sea-mark, and covered with wood, as there is not only a tradition to this effect, but the bed of the ocean is here still occupied by a subterranean forest. The towns of Penzance and Marazion are situated on this bay, which is much used as a safe and spacious harbour in north-northeast and east winds. A breakwater was recently proposed to be erected in Mounts-bay for the protection of shipping, the estimated expense of the work being as follows:—2,813,175 tons of stone at 1s., being £140,658. 15s.; and for completing the slope, 1,108,529 tons at 1s. 3d., or £69,233. 1s. 3d.—making the total cost, with ten per cent. for contingencies, £230,995. 18s. 3d. In the recent agitation of the question regarding the most eligible harbour for the West India mail steamers, it was argued, on national grounds, that, if improved, the harbour of Mounts-bay, or Penzance, would be a most important and highly advantageous port and place of refuge for shipping in general.

MOUNT-SORREL, LEICESTER, a chapelry and market town, partly in Rothley parish, but chiefly in that of Barrow-upon-Soar: 121 miles from London (coach road 105), 5 from Loughborough. —Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Loughborough, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Loughborough, 21 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. —The town is situated on a steep eminence rising from the river Soar, over which there is a bridge; many of the houses being built of a remarkably hard stone, a material with which the streets are paved. This stone, which affords much employment to the inhabitants in quarrying and preparing for carriage, is sent to London and other places. Limestone is also found here, and forms an article of export, but many of the inhabitants obtain a livelihood from the framework business in hosiery. On Castle Hill, which rises boldly and precipitously to a height of 100 feet above the Soar, nearly overhanging the houses, there was formerly a strong fortress, which was demolished by the order of Henry III. About the centre of the town there formerly stood an ancient cross, but towards the close of the last century it was removed to his grounds at Swithland, by Sir John Danvers, who erected on its site a small circular building, supported by eight cylindrical columns, for a market-house. There are two churches at Mount-Sorrel. The old church at the north end has a square tower with a parapet. The other church, at the south end, called Christ Church, was erected in 1844, at the sole expense of Miss Brinton, a lady resident in Berkshire; it is a small building in the Gothic style. It has a parsonage-house, with a few acres of land attached, and an endowment of £40 per annum—the cost of the whole was about £6,000. The Wesleyan and Association Methodists, the General Baptists, and the Presbyterians, have chapels here. In the General Baptist Chapel the celebrated Dr. Watts used to officiate as the minister. There is a free school here for twelve boys, founded and endowed in 1742, by Sir John Danvers. —The living (St. Peter) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Peterborough: pres. net income, £157: patron, Vicar of Barrow: pres. incumbent, Thomas Pruen, 1832: contains 680 acres: 332 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,536: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,766: ass^d. prop^r. £2,351: poor rates in 1848, £566. 2s. Rail. through Crewe to Nantwich station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 61 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — The town of Nantwich is situated in a pleasant valley, on the banks of the river Weever, over which there is a bridge; it contains several excellent houses and shops, but it is irregularly built, and many of the dwellings are old. It was formerly noted for its manufacture of salt, and in the time of Henry VII. there were as many as 300 salt-works in constant operation; and a large quantity of the article is still made here, although, in consequence of the discovery of springs of superior quality in the neighbourhood of Liverpool, the greater part of the business has gone to that place. This was the only place in Cheshire that undeviatingly adhered to the Parliamentary party during the civil war with Charles I., and a decisive battle was gained here in June, 1643, by the troops under Fairfax. The church is an elegant structure in the Gothic style of architecture. The market-house is a modern erection, built on the site of a more ancient fabric. The principal manufactures are those of silk, shoes, and cotton. Nantwich has been severely visited both by fire and the plague, the latter of which devastated the town for nearly twelve months. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Presbyterians, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. The free grammar-school was erected in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and is endowed with £10. 12s. per annum; another of the schools, called the Bluecap School, has an endowment of £47 a year, from which forty boys are clothed and educated. Almshouses have been erected here by Sir E. Wright, Sir Roger Wilbraham, Mrs. Delves, and the Crewe family. The other charities produce about £200 per annum. The Nantwich poor-law union comprises 86 parishes, with a population of about 14,000, spread over an area of 177 square miles. — The living (the Virgin Mary and St. Nicholas), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Chester, is valued at £27. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £269: patron, Lord Crewe: pres. incumbent, A. Sir Henry Delves Broughton, Bart., the representative of a family maternally descended from the Delves, who were seated at Delves Hall, in the county of Stafford, at the time of the Norman Conquest; and paternally from Richard de Vernon, fourth son of Hugo de Vernon, Baron of Shipbrooke, at the same period, from whom sprung John, Lord of Broughton and Charlton, in the time of Henry VI. A descendant of that nobleman, Thomas Broughton, Esq., was fined £3,200 by the parliament, for his loyalty to Charles I.; and his heir, Brian Broughton, Esq., was created a baronet in 1661. A descendant of his, Sir Brian, the fourth baronet, assumed the name of Delves. Sir John Delves, the seventh baronet, dying without issue, the title and estates devolved upon his brother, their present owner. At Nantwich, also, is the residence of Charles Wicksted, Esq., the only son of George Tollet, Esq. of Betley Hall, in the county of Stafford, who assumed the name and arms of Wicksted on inheriting the property of his great-uncle, Thomas Wicksted, Esq. Mr. Wicksted, who is the descendant of a family founded in the time of Henry VIII., filled the office of high sheriff of Cheshire in 1822. — Pool Hall is the seat of Francis Elcock Massey, Esq., the representative of a family long settled in this part of the country.

although lighted with gas; but the town-hall is a handsome building, having a corn-market in its basement story. The ruins of Neath Castle, which was built most probably by Richard Greenfield, are in the neighbourhood; and about a mile south of the town, close by the copperworks, and the banks of the river, are the extensive ruins of Neath Abbey, founded in the time of the same personage (A.D. 1149), and concerning which there is a well-accredited tradition, that seven persons could preach in different parts of the abbey at the same time, without being overheard by each other. It was near the abbey, where he had taken refuge, that the unfortunate King Edward II. was taken prisoner. Though small in size, Neath is a very active port, the shipping business being done at Britton Ferry, about two miles lower down the river. Vessels of from 300 to 400 tons can get up the river to the town, but the trade is chiefly carried on by barges on the canal between the town and the ferry. By Britton Ferry, Neath has become the vent for all the produce of the busy and prosperous vale in which it is situated; and there are there extensive copper and iron works, foundries, collieries, and other works of a similar character. Neath appears to have been a borough by prescription. Under the new municipal act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, who have a public income of about £250 a year. Neath now joins with the Swansea boroughs in returning one member to parliament. The Neath poor-law union comprises 30 parishes, with a population of about 24,000 persons. — The living, a rectory, consolidated with Lantwit, in the archd^y and diocese of Llandaff, is valued at £16. 2s. 3½d.: pres. net income, £300: patron, Trustees of Marquis of Bute: pres. incumbent, H. NETLEY ABBEY, HANTS, a tithing in Hound parish—(which see for access, &c.): 78 miles from London, 3 from Southampton, 5 from Botley. —The magnificent ruins are situated on the declivity of a hill, but so encompassed with trees as to be entirely secluded from view till a very near approach. Many parts of the walls are beautifully mantled with ivy and other evergreens, and the various trees and shrubs that have vegetated among the mouldering walls contribute to the picturesque appearance of the place. Among the ruins with which the ground is strewed, may be discerned various devices and armorial bearings of the benefactors to this abbey. The walls of the church are still in many parts as high as their original termination, in which remain the windows and other mural decorations, though much of the tracery of the former is destroyed. The columns and arches composing the aisles are fallen into prodigious masses of undistinguishable ruin. On the north side of the transept are the remains of a spiral staircase, that led to the upper part of the tower, which is said to have been ornamented with pinnacles, and served as a mark for mariners. The ruin, however, regarded as a whole, both on account of its size, extent, the elegance of its construction, the profusion of ivy with which it is overgrown, and which half closes its figured windows, serving by its sober colour to set off the more lively green of a variety of trees and shrubs that have spontaneously grown up within its walls, may justly be classed among the most distinguished monastic ruins in the country.

NEVIN, CARNARVON, a parish and borough in Dinllaen hun^d, union of Pwllheli, North Wales: 266 miles from London (coach road 250), 6 from Pwllheli, 20 from Carnarvon.---Gt. West. Rail. through Crewe and Chester to Bangor, thence 28 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 166 miles.---Money orders issued at Pwllheli: London letters deliv^d. 12½ p.m.: post closes 7½ a.m.---Nevin was made a free borough by Edward the Black Prince. It contributes with Carnarvon, and the other boroughs, in returning one member to parliament. The town has a small port, but very little trade. There is no export whatever, and coals are the only articles imported. But the place has been for some time improving rapidly. About forty years ago, an enterprising and successful individual commenced to build vessels for the coasting trade. He was followed by others; and now more than 100 vessels, chiefly schooners, belong to the inhabitants. They are manned by more than 400 sailors. The town, which formerly was a poor fishing village, has been greatly renovated, and has now many good houses, though not one good inn. It is still irregular, straggling, and rather dirty. There is yet much poverty in the parish. The people are unique in their habits, very distinct from all in the surrounding country. There is not a landowner of any extent in the place, and, till lately, there was no resident incumbent. The means of education are of a very low order. There is a national school, which is capable of accommodating about 120 children, but is badly supported, and in a languishing condition. The parish church is a building devoid of ornament. It is capable of accommodating about 400 people. The Calvinistic Methodists are the prevailing sect. There are also chapels belonging to the Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists.---The living, a perpetual curacy or vicarage in the archd^y of Merioneth, and diocese of Bangor, is valued at £2. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £114: patron, C. W. G. Wynne: pres. incumbent, W. Jones, 1842: contains 380 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,656: probable popⁿ in 1851, 1,900: ass^d. prop^r. £1,279: poor rates in 1848, £222. 12s. The tithes were commuted in 1840.

NEWARK. See EASTFIELD-WITH-NEWARK.

NEWARK-UPON-TRENT, NOTTINGHAM, a parish, borough, and market town, in the southern division of Newark wapentake, union of Newark: 147 miles from London (coach road 124), 19 from Nottingham.---Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Nottingham to Newark station: from Derby, through Nottingham, 33 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 5½ p.m.: post closes 7 p.m.---The town is situated on the eastern bank of the Newark navigable canal, which is formed by a branch of the river Trent, deviating from the main stream about three miles above the town, and again uniting with it about a mile and a half below it. Next to Nottingham, this is the largest town in the county. It is well and neatly built, and has a large quadrangular market-place, in which stands the town-hall, a handsome edifice, erected in 1805, at an expense of £17,000. The old parish church was built by Henry IV., and is justly considered to be one of the most spacious and elegant parish churches in the kingdom. It is highly ornamented, and most of the windows with rich tracery, while statues and other ornaments adorn every part of the interior. It has a light and elegant tower, surmounted by a lofty stone spire. Newark Castle, the remains of which form one of the most interesting ruins in the kingdom, and which are still so extensive as to show the great size and magnificence of this truly noble fabric, was built in the reign of King Stephen, and called the New Work,---proving that there was formerly an older work in its place,---and hence the name of the town. It was the last retreat of King John, and was one of the principal garrisons of the royalists during the civil war, only surrendering to the parliamentarians by order of the king, at the conclusion of the contest. It was dismantled by order of the republican government. The space enclosed by the old walls has been partly adapted for a pleasure-ground for the inhabitants, and partly arranged for a cattle-market. Near to the foot of the Castlehill it is crossed by an elegant bridge, originally erected by Mr. Smeaton, but which has been much improved of late years by the engineers of the Midland Counties Railway. The fosse road from Lincoln to Leicester runs through the town, which, from its peculiar situation on the Great North Road, was, in more troublesome times than the present called the Key of the North. A new church was built here about a dozen years ago, and almost every section of the dissenters have chapels here, those belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists and Independents being very imposing structures. The grammar-school of Newark was founded and endowed in the reign of Henry VIII., by the Rev. Thomas Magnus, Archdeacon of the East Riding of Yorkshire, who bequeathed to it, and for other charitable purposes, the lordship of Everton and other lands, to which some additions were made from Philpot's and Lawrence's charities; its whole income amounting to £310 per annum. The son of every resident in the town is entitled to a classical education, free of cost. The total income of Magnus's charity amounts to about £2,400 per annum. This, with the produce of Philpot's and Lawrence's, with that of the other charities, is appropriated for the common benefit of the town. Philpot's and Lawrence's almshouses, which form a neat quadrangle, consist of tenements for ten men and ten women. Newark was first incorporated by a charter of Edward VI., but the governing charter of the town, until the passing of the Municipal Reform Bill, was one granted by Charles I., afterwards modified and extended by Charles II. This town is now governed by six aldermen, and eighteen common councillors. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here. The Newark poor-law union comprises 49 parishes, with a population of about 26,000, spread over an area of 140 square miles. Newark is a polling-place, and the principal place of election, for the southern division of the county. Stukeley, the antiquary, Bishop Warburton, and several other eminent men, were educated at the grammar-school here. The living (St. Mary Magdalen), a vicarage in the diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £21. 5s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £325: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, J. G. Bussell, 1835: contains 2,080 acres: 2,022 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 10,195: probable popⁿ in 1849, 11,724: ass^d. prop^r. £26,418: poor rates in 1848, £3,120. 9s. Market day, Wednesday. NEWBURY, BERKS, a parish, borough, and market town, in the hun^d of Faircross, union of Newbury, on the river Kennet, and intersected by the Kennet and Avon Canal: 53 miles from London (coach road 56), 17 from Reading.—Gt. West. Rail. to Newbury station: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Newbury, 139 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 10 p.m. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile plain, watered by the river Kennet, over which there is a stone bridge, and is one of the largest places in the county. The principal streets are broad, well paved, and lighted with gas. The town-hall over the market-house is ornamented with a picture of the surrender of Calais, by Price, and the courts of justice meet there. The parish church of St. Nicholas is a spacious edifice in the later style of English architecture, and was built towards the end of the reign of Henry VII., or the beginning of that of Henry VIII. The chapel of St. Bartholomew is a small establishment, and was erected for the purpose of reading prayers for the inmates of the workhouse. Newbury was at one time celebrated for its woollen manufactures, but that business has long since disappeared, and it has instead become a large entrepot for agricultural produce, upwards of 7,000 tons of corn being annually exported by the Kennet and Avon Canal, while the amount of malt made in the town and vicinity is exceedingly great. The market is consequently one of the largest in the county. Newbury is a place of considerable antiquity, being supposed to have arisen from the Roman station Spina, the site of which is now occupied by the hamlet of Speenhamland, close by the town. William the Conqueror bestowed it upon Ernulph de Hesdin. During the reign of Edward I., Newbury returned two members to parliament, and in the time of Henry VIII. it was celebrated for its manufacture of broad cloths. It was in the reign of the latter monarch that the famous John Winchcombe, better known by the appellation of Jack of Newbury, marched, in 1513, with a hundred of his workmen, clothed and armed at his own expense, to the battle of Flodden Field, for which afterwards Henry paid him the honour of a personal visit. During the civil war, the neighbourhood of the town was made the scene of two very severe contests; the first being fought on a common called the Wash, and the second in the fields between Newbury, Speen, and Shaw, in 1644, the king commanding his army in person on both occasions. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, all have chapels here. The public charities are very numerous, for besides the several almshouses, one set of which is occupied by eighty persons, the other charities bring in upwards of £500 a year. Newbury is said to have been a borough by prescription, long before a charter was granted by Queen Elizabeth; it is now governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors. The Newbury poor-law union comprehends 18 parishes, with a population of about 19,000 persons, spread over an area of 72 square miles. The living, a rectory in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £38. 16s. 10d.: pres. net income, £455: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, H. Binney, 1838: contains 1,820 acres: 1,259 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 6,379: probable popⁿ in 1849, 7,335: ass^d. prop^r. £13,288: poor rates in 1848, £3,675. 3s. Tithes commuted in 1839. It is a noble mansion, built of brick, after a design by Sir Christopher Wren, about the year 1705. The interior is embellished with some of the finest works of art in the kingdom, and the exterior is surrounded by pleasure-grounds, laid out in the most correct style. The noble proprietor of this princely domain traces his descent from Anthony Grey, ninth Earl of Kent, whose grandson, Henry, inherited the honour of Baron Lucas in right of his mother, and was created Viscount Gooderich, of Gooderich Castle, in Herefordshire, Earl Harold of Bedford, and Marquis of Kent. In 1710, his Lordship was created Duke of Kent, and shortly afterwards was installed a knight of the Garter. His Grace, who had been lord privy seal, lord steward of the household, and had filled other high offices in the state, died in 1740, when all the honours, except the marquise of Grey, and the barony of Lucas, became extinct, but these devolved upon his granddaughter, Lady Jemima, wife of Lord Royston, whose eldest daughter inherited the barony of Lucas, and whose second daughter, Mary Jemima, having married Thomas, second Lord Grantham, died in 1830, leaving two sons. The eldest of these, Thomas Philip, succeeded his father as third

Lord Grantham, and is now the present Earl de Grey. The second son, Frederic John, who has also filled some of the highest offices in the state, having been chancellor of the exchequer and prime minister of the empire, was created Viscount Goderich and Earl of Ripon. The Earl de Grey, paternally, derives his descent from Sir William Robinson, Knt., grandson of William Robinson, Esq., who was lord mayor of York in 1581 and 1594, sat as representative of the city in the House of Commons, and was high sheriff of the county in 1638. The son of Sir William was created a baronet in 1660, and represented York for several years in parliament, but dying without issue, the baronetcy expired, the estates devolving to his nephew, William Robinson, Esq., who was lord mayor of York, high sheriff of the county, and sat for many years in parliament, and in whose favour the baronetcy was revived in 1689. The grandson of that gentleman represented his native country in several of the courts of Europe, and was, for his eminent diplomatic services, elevated to the peerage, with the title of Lord Grantham, in 1761. Of that nobleman Earl de Grey is the grandson, having succeeded to the title of Lord Grantham on the death of his father in 1786, and having inherited the barony of Lucas, with the earldom, on the death of his aunt, Amabel Countess de Grey, when he assumed the name and arms of De Grey.

D. Richardson, 1835: contains 76 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 430: ass^d. prop^r. £942: poor rates in 1848, £104. 14s.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, NORTHUMBERLAND, an ancient seat of population: 303 miles from London (coach road 275), 15 from Durham.—Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and York, to Newcastle station: from Derby, through York, &c., 171 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 10½ a.m.: post closes 3.26 p.m. and 10 p.m.—From the several remains which have from time to time been discovered, it appears to be amply proved that Newcastle was a Roman station of very considerable importance. During the heptarchy it became noted for its ecclesiastical establishments, and the number of monks who settled within its precincts, and as a shrine to which a great number of pilgrims resorted; and it in consequence obtained the characteristic appellation of Monkchester. One of the chief thoroughfares in the town still bears the name of Pilgrim Street. Another ancient town, called Pumpedon, also stood within the present municipal boundaries. In 875, all these monasteries were plundered and almost demolished by the Danes, and lay in their dilapidated state until the year 1073, when they were repaired by some priests from Mercia. In 1082, a new castle was built on the site of the old Roman fortress called Pons Ælii, by one of the sons of the Conqueror, and hence was derived the present name of the town, Newcastle. This fortress being intended to defend the south and east of England from aggressions on the north-west, greatly increased the importance of the town. Early in the reign of Stephen, Newcastle went, either by force or treaty, into the possession of David I., king of Scotland, and remained an appanage of the Scottish crown for sixteen years. Throughout the long period of border warfare, it shared all the vicissitudes which arose from the wild forays to which its vicinity was subject. In 1641, Newcastle again fell under the power of the Scots, and was only evacuated on paying the enormous ransom of £60,000. Three years afterwards it again surrendered to the Scots, after a ten weeks' siege. Throughout the civil war it zealously espoused the cause of Charles I., and here the king spent part of the time of his captivity with the Scots, after he fell into their power at Southwell. After his departure the town was re-fortified, and put into a complete state of defence. During the rebellion of 1745, Newcastle contributed 3,000 volunteers to the cause of the House of Hanover, and became a great entrepot of troops; and in the year 1797, and during every year of the subsequent war with France, the corporation contributed £500 towards the expenses of the government. Since then the history of the town is only to be traced in the development of its trade, and the progress of its architectural improvement. Occupying a narrow belt of level land by the side of the Tyne, from which three hills abruptly rise, and along the sides and faces of which, and between their hollows, the vast mass of human habitations is clustered, Newcastle presents a very varied and picturesque aspect. Formerly, the dwellings were of mean and humble appearance, but of late years a vast alteration has been made in this respect, and the town can now boast of as many handsome edifices and streets as any place of its size in the empire. A great part of this improvement is owing to the skill, enterprise, and perseverance of a gentleman of the name of Grainger, who, from a lowly origin, elevated himself to wealth and position. In little more than the five years which elapsed after 1834, he constructed nine new streets, forming property worth little less than £800,000. With so large and so wealthy a population as that of which Newcastle can boast, the public buildings, as would naturally be supposed, are both numerous and imposing in their appearance, particularly the Exchange, which cost £10,000; the Mansion-house, which was re-edified by an outlay of £6,000, but which is now let as a warehouse; the Moot-hall, on the same height as the Castle, and the architectural details of which are borrowed from the temple of Thesus at Athens; the Theatre, the portico of which has a colonnade of six Corinthian pillars; the Music-hall, and the other erections devoted to the several religious, educational, and recreative purposes of the inhabitants. The old parish church of St. Nicholas is a fine structure, erected, or rather restored, in 1359, but subsequently much altered; it now bears the appearance of the decorated style of English architecture. Some of its windows are richly embellished, and the interior contains several fine monuments. All the other churches are pleasing, and some of them elegant buildings. All the town and county of the town of Newcastle are in the parish of St. Nicholas, with the parochial chapelry of All Saints, St. Andrew's, St. John's, and St. Ann's, all in the archd^y of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham. The living of St. Nicholas is a vicarage, with Gosforth curacy; rated at £50;

gross income, £833. Patron, the Bishop of Carlisle. All Saints is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £330. St. Andrew's is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £227. St. John's is a perpetual curacy, with the curacy of St. James'; gross income, £259. St. Ann's is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £110. These four are in the patronage of the Vicar of Newcastle. There are in the town three Independent churches, formed in 1746, 1788, and 1820; two Baptist, formed in 1725 and 1817; two Scotch, in 1752 and 1802; two Wesleyan Methodist, in 1814 and 1820; three United Associate; two Scotch Relief; one Friends'; one Unitarian; one New Connection Methodist, in 1798; one Primitive Methodist, in 1810; two Swedenborgian, in 1808 and 1832; and one Roman Catholic, in 1797. The Royal Grammar School was founded in 1525 by Mr. T. Horsley, who was at that time mayor, and chartered by Queen Elizabeth, under the auspices of the corporation. The Royal Jubilee School, the building for which is a handsome structure, erected at a cost of more than £2,000, is another of the important institutions of the town; but to enumerate all the educational and benevolent institutions of Newcastle would be far beyond our limits, and it may therefore suffice to say, that several thousand pounds are yearly expended in their conduct and support, and that no one good object for the welfare of the inhabitants and their offspring has been neglected. Newcastle is principally known as a great commercial entrepot, but the manufactures carried on here are neither few nor unimportant. The manufacture of glass, which was commenced on a large scale about the close of the 16th century, was afterwards removed to Stafford, but was brought back again to Newcastle, and is now a chief source of employment in the township of Byker; several establishments there, before the remission of the glass duties by Sir Robert Peel, generally paid more than £200,000 a year in excise duties. There is also a considerable quantity of fine earthenware made here, and several chemical works are now in active operation, many of their chimneys rising to the height of from 150 to 300 feet. Factories for soapworks, for the making of sailcloths, for the construction of steam-engines, and all other works of a similar character for the making of paper, and the other leading articles of trade, also abound. The chief export trade consists in coal, both for home and foreign consumption, while the productions of the manufactories furnish many and valuable objects of export to other countries; the receipts at the custom-house averaging nearly a million of money, being exceeded in amount only by those of London, Liverpool, Bristol, Hull, and Glasgow. There are bonding-houses at Newcastle for all foreign goods without limitation. The Tyne at Newcastle has a mean breadth of 450 feet, and vessels of from 200 to 300 tons, and sometimes of 400 tons, can make their way up to the town, the tidal rise at Tyne-mouth bar being 18 feet, and the depth about 26 feet. The number of men and boys employed in the navigation is now above 12,000, and the number of ships frequenting the port is nearly 2,000. A number of steam-ships ply regularly between Newcastle and the other principal ports of the kingdom. The guilds and trading companies are both numerous and important. This town was early incorporated, but all its old regulations were of course done away with by the Municipal Reform Act, under which has been appointed a mayor, thirteen aldermen, and forty-two common councillors for its government. Newcastle has returned two members to parliament since the time of Edward I.; the sheriff is now the returning officer: it is a polling-place for the southern division of the county. A workhouse has been built here, which can accommodate 320 persons. The Newcastle poor-law union comprises eleven parishes, with a population of about 55,000, spread over an area of ten square miles. Popⁿ in 1841, 49,860. Market days: Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs: March 26, second Wednesday in August, last Wednesday in October, and last Wednesday in November; cattle, every Tuesday; Wool fair every Tuesday in May, June, July, and October. Bankers: W. H. NEWCASTLE, SALOP, a township in Clun parish—(which see for access, &c.): 166 miles from London, 7 from Bishop's-Castle, 7 from Knighton. Money orders issued at Bishop's-Castle: London letters deliv^d 2 p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. Contains 58 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 176.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME, STAFFORD, a parish, borough, and market town, in the north division of Pirehill hun^d, union of Newcastle-under-Lyme, or Lyne, near the source of the Trent, intersected by a branch of the Grand Trunk Canal: 155 miles from London (coach road 149), 16 from Stafford. Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton to Madeley, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Stafford to Madeley, &c., 55 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. The town is well built, particularly the principal street, which is spacious and well paved, and has an excellent market-place in the centre, where stands the guildhall, a large and handsome structure of brick, surmounted by a cupola. The hall is supported by pillars, and under it is the market-house. A theatre, a literary and scientific institution, and several libraries, contribute to the enjoyment and welfare of the inhabitants. Many of the houses, however, are of ancient appearance. The chief business of Newcastle consists of the manufacture of hats, which are prepared for the finishers in London; but the cotton manufacture has also been introduced, and paper and pottery-ware are made to some extent; silk also is largely manufactured in the parish. Formerly, Newcastle was a great highway to the north-west, and coaches were constantly rattling through its streets; but the formation of the Grand Junction Railway has materially changed the face of affairs in that respect. An extensive coal business is carried on here; and in the townships of Shelton and Hanley there are some important mines. The Independents, Baptists, Unitarians, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. That of the last-named sect is a singular structure, built of ornamental bricks in the Gothic style. Some of the schools here have small endowments. The other charities produce about £230 a year. The Newcastle poor-law union comprises nine parishes. The first charter appears to have been granted to Newcastle by Henry II., and the first charter of incorporation by Queen Elizabeth, which was confirmed and enlarged by Charles II.; the income of the borough is about £600 a year. Under the municipal act, Newcastle is divided into two wards, and governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors, under the usual corporate style. The borough has returned two members to Parliament since the time of Edward III., if not for a longer period; the mayor is the returning officer. This is one of the polling-places for the county elections. The living (St. Saviour), a rectory in the archd^y of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £25. 9s. 6d.: pres. net income, £285: patron, Simeon's Trustees: pres. incumbent, C. On the north side of the cemetery there is an obelisk erected, to commemorate the wreck of the Brazen sloop of war, which went to pieces on the Ave rocks, in the vicinity, in the year 1800, and when Captain Hanson and all his crew, except one man, perished. Newhaven, celebrated as the part pointed out by the Prince de Joinville of Franco, as the place where England could be easily invaded, and where his own father, Louis Philippe, once king of the French, two years afterwards, in flight, and in a miserable disguise, landed for safety, possesses a harbour of very considerable value. It is formed in the channel of the river Ouse, at its embouchure to the sea, by wooden piers, carried out in a southerly direction across the beach. The bar is left dry at low spring-tides, but within the pier there are always two feet of water at such times, a depth which continues uniform for a mile up the channel. The bay is defended by a small fort, and a revenue cutter is generally stationed here. The town is neatly built, and a considerable trade is carried on in the port in timber and coals, there being bonded houses for the latter on the quay. A workhouse has been erected here, which is capable of accommodating 150 persons. The Newhaven poor-law union comprises sixteen parishes, with a population of about 4,500 persons, spread over an area of 41 square miles. NEWLANDS, CUMBERLAND, a chapelry and township, on a small stream which flows into Basenthwaite water, in Crosthwaite parish—(which see for access, &c.): 285 miles from London, 5 from Keswick, 15 from Ambleside. Money orders issued at Keswick: London letters deliv^d 1½ p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. There are copper mines here, and a mine of lead. When the copper veins were first discovered in the reign of Elizabeth, in the lordship of the Earl of Northumberland, so much gold and silver was extracted from the ore, that they were entitled to be called Royal property, and a lawsuit being instituted, the proceedings terminated in a verdict for the Crown. The original smelting-works were destroyed during the parliamentary war, when the miners were slain, and ultimately the place was given up. The living, a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Carlisle, is valued at £21: pres. net income, £80: patron, Vicar of Crosthwaite: pres. incumbent, John Monkhouse: contains 22 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 133.

NEWMARKET, SUFFOLK, a market town in the union of Newmarket, comprising the parishes of St. Mary and All Saints: 68 miles from London (coach road 61), 13 from Cambridge. — Nor. and East. Co^r. Rail. through Chesterford to Newmarket station: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, and Cambridge, to Newmarket, 146 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 10 a.m. — The town is pleasantly situated, the greater part of it occupying the declivity of a gentle hill, consisting principally of one long street, the northern side of which is in the county of Suffolk, and the southern in that of Cambridge. The main street is well lighted and paved, and most of the houses are modern and of excellent exterior, while those erected for the convenience of visitors during the races are very handsome. The inhabitants are supplied with water from springs. Coffee-houses, billiard and other rooms, have been amply provided. The inns are proverbial for their good accommodation, and two coffee-houses are conveniently situated for the use of sportsmen when they meet to settle matches; but the principal feature of the place is the news-rooms for the use of the Jockey Club, which are situated in the centre of the town. The trade of Newmarket depends almost exclusively on affairs connected with the turf, for which it has been long celebrated. The race-course, formed on an extensive heath in Cambridgeshire, in the immediate vicinity of the town, is four miles in length, and one of the finest in the kingdom. The training ground is also very fine. Previously to 1753, when the Jockey Club purchased the present racing-ground, there were only two meetings in the year at Newmarket for the purpose of running horses; there are now seven, viz. — the Craven, on Easter-Monday; the First Spring, on Monday fortnight following; Second Spring, a fortnight after that; the July; the First October, held on the first Monday in that month; the Second October, on the Monday fortnight following; and the Third October, or Houghton, a fortnight afterwards. Those held in Easter-week, and in the month of October, are the principal. At these periods the town presents an exceedingly lively and interesting appearance. The market is held on Tuesday; and there are fairs for horses and sheep on Whit-Tuesday and November 8th. Petty sessions are held every Tuesday. It is said that the first races which took place here, were occasioned by the arrival of some Spanish horses which had escaped the wreck of the Spanish Armada. James I. erected a hunting-seat here, called the King's House. It was rebuilt by Charles II., who was a great patroniser of the turf, and a constant visitor at the Newmarket races. He was the first monarch who entered horses, and ran them in his own name. In March, 1683, when this monarch and several members of the royal family had assembled to witness the races, a tremendous fire broke out, which consumed a great part of the town. It has been supposed that the defeat of the Rye-house Plot may be attributed to this accident, as it occasioned the company to depart at a different hour to that calculated upon by the conspirators. It was also devastated by fire in the early part of last century, when a considerable amount of property was destroyed. The charities amount to about £31 per annum. — The living (St. Mary), a disch^d rectory, with Wood-Ditton vicarage, formerly in the archd^y of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, now in the diocese of Ely, is valued at £4. 15s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £390: patron, the Duke of Rutland: contains £570 acres: 490 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,143: probable popⁿ in 1849, 2,464: ass^d. prop^r £6,178: poor rates in 1848, £1,113. 5s. NEWPORT (St. WOOLAS), MONMOUTH, a parish and township, borough, market town, and seaport, in the hun^d of Wentlloo, union of Newport, on the western bank of the river Usk: 156 miles from London (coach road 148), 12 from Cardiff. — Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow, to Newport station: from Derby, through Birmingham and Gloucester, &c., 147 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 4.37 p.m. — This place, called by Giraldus Novus Burgus or New Town, in contradistinction to the ancient city of Caerleon, arose out of the declining greatness of that celebrated station; and here Robert of Gloucester, a natural son of Henry I., erected a castle for the defence of his possessions, whence it was denominated for some time Castell Newydd or New Castle. From him it descended through the possession of several noble families, till, on the execution of Edward, Duke of Buckingham, it was seized by Henry VIII. The town is pleasantly situated on the river Usk, which is navigable for vessels of a large size, and is crossed by an elegant stone bridge, about four miles from its junction with the river Severn. It consists principally of one long narrow street, which extends from an eminence, on which is the parish church, to the river, and forms part of the old mail-coach road from Bristol to Milford-Haven. The streets are paved, and well lighted with gas. Several new and handsome buildings indicate the great progress of the town during the last few years; and the inhabitants now enjoy the advantage of all the appliances necessary for the enjoyment of a refined and intellectual life, and it may now be considered one of the neatest and most pleasing towns in the kingdom. It has latterly extended in every direction on the western bank of the river, particularly towards the south, where it is almost united with Pill-Gwenlly. The upper or north part of the town, however, still continues, though the oldest, to be the most respectable, having the best shops, and the most numerous private residences. In 1839, Newport was the scene of a serious Chartist attack, when several thousand men, chiefly engaged in the collieries, headed by Frost, who had formerly been a respectable draper in the town, Williams, and others, made an attempt to take possession of it; but they were gallantly repulsed by a single company of infantry, commanded by Lieutenant now Captain Gray, headed by Mr. now Sir Thomas Philips, then mayor of Newport, who in a most gallant manner headed the party in his capacity of a civil magistrate. The living of St. Woolas (the original name of the town) is a disch^d vicarage, with the curacy of Bettws, in the archd^y and diocese of Llandaff; rated at £7. 3s. 11½d.; gross income, £286; formerly in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The church of St. Woolas stands on an eminence at the upper end of the principal street of Newport: its tower was erected by Henry III. The commissioners for church extension built a new church here in 1836. Its principal feature is an octagonal tower, resting on a portico of open arches, and crowned with a spire. There is a seamen's chapel in the vicinity of the town; and three Independent churches were formed in 1814, 1822, and 1834; a Baptist, in 1829; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1808; and a Calvinistic Methodist, in 1800. There is also a Roman Catholic chapel; and in the parish are five daily, and six day and boarding schools. One of the daily is a National school, and two others are Lancasterian; all three are supported by voluntary contributions, and weekly penny payments from the children. Here is a free school, but no evidence of endowment. Newport is capitally situated for carrying on an extensive trade, and has been appointed a port for bonding all kinds of foreign goods, and the gross receipts of the customs are now more than £20,000 per annum. Besides its foreign commerce, however, the port enjoys the benefits of an extensive inland trade, and more than 8,000 vessels have cleared out in one year, carrying coals, iron, and tin, to the value of more than £1,000,000 sterling. Shipbuilding has consequently been carried on here to a large extent, but of course the welfare of the place fluctuates greatly according to the dealings in coal and iron, which are its staple commodities. The business is also increased by numerous rope-walks, breweries, potteries, and other establishments. Newport is a borough by prescription, but a governing charter was granted by James I., under which a mayor and thirteen aldermen became the principal officers. By the municipal act it is divided into two wards, from which six aldermen and eighteen common councillors are yearly elected. The Newport poor-law union comprehends 40 parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons, spread over an area of 139 square miles. Contains 3,120 acres: 1,256 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 13,766: probable popⁿ in 1849, 15,785: poor rates in 1848, £1,665. 6s. Market day, Saturday. Fairs: Holy-Thursday, Whit-Thursday, Aug. 15, and Nov. 6; cattle market, every Wednesday. NEWPORT, SALOP, a parish and market town in Newport division of South Bradford hund^d, union of Newport: 143 miles from London (coach road 142), 17 from Shrewsbury.—Nor. West. Rail. through Stafford to Newport station: from Derby, through Stafford to Newport, &c., 52 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 5.20 p.m.—The town of Newport is situated on the river Strine, and though irregularly built, contains some good houses. The town-house, towards the construction of which William Adams, Esq., gave the sum of £500, is a neat edifice. In the neighbourhood there are several mines for coal, iron, and limestone. The free grammar-school was founded and endowed by the gentleman just mentioned, a native of Newport, who, in 1756, assigned certain lands for the support of a master and an usher, for the endowment of four almshouses for as many poor persons, and the endowment of four scholarships at the university of Oxford or Cambridge, and for other purposes; the present income of the endowment is £1,330. Glover's almshouses are endowed with £69 a year. The other charities produce about £315 per annum, a portion of which is applied to parochial purposes. Besides these, there is also a school which is endowed with £50 a year. The Independents have a chapel here. The Newport poor-law union comprises 16 parishes, with a population of about 16,000 persons, spread over an area of 53 square miles.—The living (St. Nicholas) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield: pres. net income, £275: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, W. NEWPORT-PAGNELL, BUCKINGHAM, a parish and market town in Newport hund^d, union of Newport-Pagnell: 58 miles from London (coach road 50), 12 from Bedford.—Nor. West. Rail. to Wolverton, thence 5 miles; from Derby, through Rugby to Wolverton, &c., 85 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 1½ p.m.: post closes 9.10 a.m. and 9 p.m.—The town, which is large and well built, is divided into two unequal portions by a small stream called the Louvet. The church, which was built in 1828, occupies an eminence, and is a very handsome edifice; from the ground by which it is enclosed, very extensive views of the surrounding country are obtained. The inhabitants used formerly to be supplied with water from the river Ouse, through the instrumentality of an hydraulic machine, but a plentiful supply is now obtained from springs. A considerable portion of the population is employed in the manufacture of lace. The government of the town is vested in constables and other inferior officers, appointed at a manorial court held once in two years. Petty sessions for the hundred of Newport are held here. A theological academy for Protestants of various denominations, was instituted here in 1764, which is principally supported by voluntary contributions. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. Queen Anne's almshouses here were originally founded by John de Someric, about the year 1280, their income being at the present time about £260 a year. Almshouses were likewise founded and endowed for seven poor persons about the year 1756, by John Revis, the income of which is about £164 per annum. The other charities produce about £195 a year, part of which is applied to parochial purposes. The site was granted by Henry VIII. to Charles, Duke of Suffolk, and eventually to Sir Henry Stanley, Lord Strange. By the Stanley family the priory was converted into a residence, and was ultimately rebuilt by Sir William Ellys, and is now the principal residence of the Right Hon. Frederic John Robinson, Earl of Ripon, Viscount Goderich. The mansion is a large and handsome structure, consisting of a body and two wings, the angles turreted with cupolas at the top, and in the centre there is an octangular cupola or lantern to crown the whole. The grounds around are extensive, and the views commanded from them numerous, varied, and extensive. The noble proprietor of this fine domain is a brother of Earl de Grey, and for the family history, therefore, see NEWBY. The Earl of Ripon for many years held most important positions in the government of the country. For some time he was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and is allowed to have been the author of that clear mode of stating the public estimates of the imperial expenditure to the House of Commons which now prevails. His lordship afterwards took the post of Prime Minister, but resigned it in 1828. He obtained his viscounty by patent in 1827, and having afterwards filled the offices of Secretary for the Colonies and Lord Privy Seal, was advanced to his earldom in 1833. His lordship married Lady Sarah Louisa Albinia, only daughter and eventually heiress of Robert, fourth Earl of Buckinghamshire, through whom he derived the Nocton estates. NORTHALLERTON, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish, borough, and market town, in the wapentake of Allertonshire, union of Northallerton: the parish includes the chapelries of Brompton, Deighton, and High Worsall, and the township of Romanby: 225 miles from London, 9 from Thirsk. —London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. and 8½ p.m. —The town, which is situated on a rising ground, in a delightful valley, watered by the river Wiske, consists of one street, about half a mile long, is well built and lighted with gas, and has a spacious market-place. The church, which is a fine edifice, is supposed to have been erected about the middle of the 14th century. The sessions-house, on the eastern side of the town, is a large and handsome building. The principal businesses are in the manufacture of linen and leather. On the west side of the town there was formerly a castle, built by Rufus, bishop of Durham, in the reign of Henry I. Here, says Tanner, was an hospital dedicated to St. James; founded, it is said, by Hugh Persne, bishop of Durham, in the time of Richard I. or Henry II. About the time of the dissolution, here were a master, three chaplains, four brethren, two sisters, and nine poor persons, whose revenues were then valued at £58. 10s. 10d. per annum in the whole, and £26. 2s. 2d. clearly. It was granted 32^d Henry VIII. to Sir Richard Morysine, but being afterwards exchanged for other lands, it became part of the endowment of Christ Church, Oxford. Here was also a house of Carmelite or White friars, dedicated to St. Mary. William de Alerton gave the Austin friars eight acres of ground in this town, to build them a church and a habitation thereon, 14^d Edward III. Northallerton not being a corporate town, the county magistrates exercise a judicial authority over it. The quarter sessions for the north riding of the county are held here. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. One of the schools has an endowment for the education of four boys, and two others have an income of £10 per annum. The Maison Dieu hospital enjoys funds for the support of some poor persons, each of whom receives £4 a year. The other charities produce about £80 per annum. In the neighbourhood of Northallerton is Standard Hill, so called from the celebrated battle of the standard having been fought upon it. The cause of the conflict receiving the name it bears is this:—In 1138, David, King of Scotland, having invaded the northern counties of England, he was met by the English army under the Earls of Albemarle and Ferrers. Thurston, the Archbishop of York, went out to their assistance, and, in order to confirm the courage of the soldiery, took out from Beverley a consecrated standard, placed upon a carriage. The battle raged with great fury, but the Scots receiving an impression that their king was slain, took to flight, and were totally defeated. Northallerton, which is a polling-place for the northern division of the county, formerly returned two members to parliament, but was reduced to one by the Reform Act. The Northallerton poor-law union comprises 52 parishes, with a population of about 16,500 persons, spread over an area of 116 square miles. —The living (All Saints) is a vicarage in the diocese of York: pres. net income, £697: patron, Dean and Chapter of Durham: pres. incumbent, T. W. Mercer, 1849: contains 13,100 acres: 1,048 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 5,273: probable popⁿ in 1849, 6,063: ass^d prop^y £20,139: poor rates in 1848, £1,862. —Market day, Wednesday. NORTHAMPTON, a borough and assize town, the capital of Northamptonshire, locally situated in the hun^d of Spelhoe, union of Northampton, on the northern bank of the river Nene, which communicates here by a branch with the Grand Junction Canal: 67 miles from London (coach road 66), 18 from Buckingham. —Nor. West. Rail. through Blisworth to Northampton station: from Derby, through Weedon to Northampton, 79 miles. —

Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 2 p.m.: post closes 9½ a.m. and 10 p.m. — The origin of Northampton is unknown; but it appears, by the testimony of documents which still exist, that it was occupied at an early period by the Saxons, who gave it the name of Hamture, which in their language is eminently descriptive of its situation, and to which the prefix of North was afterwards applied. It was afterwards possessed by the Danes, who, on their gradual repression in this country, burnt it in the year 1010. About fifty years afterwards it suffered dreadfully from the conflicts between the Northumbrians and the Danes, under Tosti, nephew of Earl Godwin, who had committed great ravages in the neighbourhood; but recovered itself from these disasters shortly after the Norman Conquest, became the principal place in the county, and the occasional residence of the English kings. In 1179, a convention, consisting of knights and burgesses, barons and prelates, assembled here—the first parliament ever held in this country—to consider the laws, and to appoint the itinerant judges for the six circuits of the land, making the first approach to the present constitution of England. After the parliament had endured, during the intervening period, all the miseries of the broils between the sovereigns and the barons, Richard II., in 1380, held another parliament here, by whom the poll tax was enacted, which occasioned the insurrection of Wat Tyler. In 1675 the greater part of the town was consumed by fire, and damage to the extent of £150,000 was incurred. To meet the emergency caused by this misfortune, a subscription of £25,000 was raised, a sum greater by £7,000 than that collected to relieve the sufferers by the great fire of London. An act of parliament was obtained by the Earl of Northampton to rebuild the place, and it soon rose from its prostrate condition. Northampton now consists of four principal streets, with several smaller ones diverging from them, all being neatly paved and well lighted with gas; the houses are generally built of a reddish-coloured freestone. The principal buildings, exclusive of the churches and chapels, are the town-hall, an ancient and commodious structure; the county-hall, an elegant modern edifice; the infirmary, built in 1793; the lunatic asylum; and the theatre. The market-place, a spacious open area surrounded by shops, contains the great conduit by which the inhabitants are supplied with water. At the northern extremity of the town there are some handsome barracks; and at the southern, one of the finest of the crosses erected by Edward I. to the memory of his Queen, Eleanor of Castile. The town comprises the parishes of All Saints, St. Giles, St. Sepulchre, St. Peter, besides certain extra-parochial places lying within the outward boundary of the borough,—all in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough. The living of All Saints is a rectory, rated at £22; gross income, £357; patrons in 1835, the Corporation. The church, the roof of which is beautifully stuccoed, has an elegant portico of the Ionic order.—St. Giles is a vicarage, rated at £7. 19s.; gross income, £111; patron in 1835, Rev. E. Watkin. The church is situated at the east end of the town.—St. Sepulchre is a vicarage, rated at £6. 1s., returned at £88; gross income, £149; patron in 1835, — Batcher, Esq. The church is of a circular form, and supposed to have been built by the knights-templars, after the model of the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem.—St. Peter's is a rectory, with the perpetual curacies of Upton and Kingsthorpe, rated at £31. 2s. 11d.; gross income, £890; patrons, the Governors of St. Katherine's Hospital, London. A new episcopal church has recently been erected. Northampton, in former times, possessed three other churches, now destroyed. Here are three independent churches, a Baptist, a Presbyterian, a Wesleyan Methodist, a Friends' meeting-house, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The free grammar-school, founded in the time of Henry VIII., by Mr. Thomas Chipsey, is endowed with £136 per annum; and several other schools enjoy benefactions of similar character, but not so great in amount. The charities by which the town benefits are both numerous and extensive. The principal of them is that founded in 1552 by Sir Thomas White, for the purpose of granting loans without interest, for the period of nine years, to freemen of the corporation. Its property now amounts to about £15,500, one-ninth part of which is annually disposable in loans of £100 each. St. Thomas' hospital for twenty poor women, St. John's for eight poor persons, and almshouses adjoining the latter, together with the Roade and Kinglisbury charities, each enjoy revenues ample for their purposes. The other benefactions of the town produce about £800 a year. Most of the operative inhabitants of Northampton are engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes for the metropolitan and north-western markets, and for the export trade; and, of course, considerable business is done in and with the materials necessary for the construction of these articles. Races take place in August, on an extensive course on the north side of the town. Northampton received its first charter of incorporation from Henry VI., and the privileges which he granted were confirmed and extended by succeeding sovereigns. Under the late Municipal Act, the borough is divided into three wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors, under the usual corporate style. Northampton has returned two members to parliament since the time of Edward I.: the mayor is the returning officer. This is a polling-place for the county. The Northampton poor-law union comprises 17 parishes, with a population of about 23,000 persons, spread over an area of 71 square miles.—Contains 1,520 acres: 3,091 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 21,242: ass^d. prop^r. £21,731: poor rates in 1848, £5,353. 8s.—Market days, Monday and Saturday.—Fairs: second Tuesday in Jan., Feb. 20, third Monday in March, April 6, May 4, June 19, Aug. 5 and 26, Sept. 19, first Thursday in Nov., Nov. 28, and Dec. 30.—Bankers: Northamptonshire Union Bank—draw on Denison, Heywood, & Co.; Northamptonshire Banking Co.—draw on London and Westminster Bank.—Inns: Dolphin, Angel, George, and Peacock.

It consists chiefly of one street, which is long and irregularly built, and was formerly an important place in the woollen trade; but the water by which the mills were worked becoming deficient, the trade declined, and Northleach now, therefore, depends principally upon its agricultural neighbourhood for its support. The market-house is an ancient building, supported by columns. The free grammar-school was founded by Hugh Westwood, Esq., and is now endowed with an income of £600 a year, and shares, in common with Cheltenham, Gloucester, and Chipping-Campden, an exhibition left by George Townsend, Esq. The Northleach poor-law union comprises 30 parishes, with a population of about 10,000 persons, spread over an area of 109 square miles.
